Fun exhibited at Children's Museum

By Valerie Kroon
CORRESPONDENT

Cheerful faces, exploratory exhibits, and fun-filled hours — that's the South Shore Children's Museum in Pembroke.

On a visit one Saturday afternoon, the museum was filled with happy children, accompanied by their seemingly content and stress-free parents.

At the museum, tucked away in a corner of North Pembroke, to the right side of the Brigantine Village mall on Route 139, children can explore the hands-on exhibits, fine tune their motor skills, and learn the simple concepts of how things work.

Owner Bob McDaniel opened the museum in November 2000, and says the exhibits are designed for preschoolers and children in early elementary grades. Children must be accompanied by an adult, and there is seating in every room for parents to sit and watch as the children explore and play.

"It's perfect for ages one through seven," McDaniel said as he scurried around the facility to be sure everything was running smoothly.

There is a sign stating "Come Play" as one enters the museum, and those two words sum up what all the children in all the rooms appear to be doing. There is a gravity well, into which children are dropping a small ball, and a GEO board where they can make different shapes with elastics. There is also a sandbox in the first room, with many rubber dinosaurs that appear to be waiting for someone to build sand hills and valleys over which they can climb or hide.

In a larger room to the right, children run to greet a very large plush cow named Helga. Helga lies in the middle of the room, and children rush to climb all over her as she passively allows them to frolic.

There is also a cycle carousel for riding in this room, as well as many musical instruments, "Who are you?" two-sided mirrors, a dollhouse with wooden furniture, and brain-teaser puzzles along the wall. This is also the room where children can sit at a table and color, glue, or construct their very own crafty item to bring home.

"Children usually come here with one parent, and then they go home and say, 'Look what I made today," McDaniel said of the children who are busily working at the craft table.

Off this room, too, are two enclosed rooms for private children's birthday parties. McDaniel said that the museum has become so popular he's been averaging about a dozen parties a month.

A view of 'People, Places and Things'

Marshfield painter now showing at Ventress Library

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

A gallery show titled "People, Places and Things" suggests a certain universality of theme and tone. The title is also fitting for a first-time exhibitor with more than 70 years experience with people, places and things.

Such is the case for Marshfield resident Micheal Murphy, a 15-year North River Arts Society member and late-blooming oil and watercolor artist who, at 71, currently has his debut one-man show on view at Marshfield's Ventress Library through May 3.

As the title also hints, Murphy's 20 pieces in the show, produced over the last seven years depict a variegated, almost random array of subjects from live scenes or photos that have caught the painter's creative eye over that time.

"I pretty much paint subjects from my own experience," said Murphy, "and my approach is realistic rather than abstract. Anything that interests me, essentially, I'll try to put it on canvas."

Originally from Weymouth, Murphy began painting after returning home from service in the Air Force during the Korean War era in 1955. He later worked as a mechanic and technician in the Quincy Shipyard for 20 years until 1987, then as a sign painter for the Department of Public Works in Marshfield until retiring in the mid 90s. More recently the artist has been occupied as a private home caretaker in Marshfield, first part-time then full-time.

Murphy's various subject interests cover the range from portraits to still lifes to landscapes. Most impressive among his landscapes is a collection of pieces titled Alaska Expedition, six 4-foot by 6-foot watercolor renderings of well-chosen tundra, hillside and glacial scenes from the artist's journey to the Kodiak state in 1998.

Many of Murphy's still lifes as well as his landscapes offer a personal touch, such as the floral oil work "Just Daisies," colorfully depicting the title subject inside a Bentley College mug belonging to his sister, a recent graduate from the school. Or, the sensitively drawn portrait of the resting, two-toned family terrier dog, "Molly." For fans of the South Shore's quiet, natural locations, there's the two off-the-beaten-path, oil-rendered scenes from Marshfield, "Early Winter" and "First Snowfall."

Murphy's total media also extends to black-and-white charcoal sketches. His two offerings of this type in the show are the symbolically titled "Journey's End," depicting in detail an old and much weathered pair of work boots, and a portrait of a friend titled "Elegant Lady." Other portraits in vivid-color oil represent a different sort of angle on boxer Joe Louis, in a dark gray overcoat with those legendary clenched fists posed prominently in the forefront, plus subjects from the famous/semi-famous (the complementing pieces of Marshfield's own "Jay O'Callahan — Story Teller" and "Mark Twain — Story Writer") to the anonymous ("Old Ranch Hand").

"Painting to me is always a challenge, no matter the subject. And if people occasionally want to buy what I produce, that's a bonus to the whole experience," Murphy said.

Many of Marshfield artist Michael Murphy's still lifes as well as his landscapes offer a personal touch, such as the floral oil work "Just Daisies," colorfully depicting the title subject inside a Bentley College mug belonging to his sister, a recent graduate from the school.

Michael Murphy's paintings will be on display at the Ventress Memorial Library in Marshfield through May 3.

The best bran muffin

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

The typical coffee shop bran muffin is a huge, sticky beast of a confection, heavy and sweet enough to place it far outside the category of a health food. When attempted at home, one is immediately put off by the 2-page ingredient list and the need to let the batter sit overnight as the bran absorbs liquid and swells. One quickly concludes that bran muffins are an unholy marriage of bad taste and inconvenience.

My first task was to eliminate the overnight rest in the refrigerator. (This category of bran muffin uses a bran cereal that requires a long rest to absorb liquids; a second category uses wheat or oat bran and the batter can be used right away.) I baked up samples from both methods and found that the refrigerator muffins tasted muddy; the simpler bran recipes had a lighter texture and an earthier flavor. So, bran was in; bran cereal was out.

Next, I tested a variety of recipes from Cook's Illustrated, Baking with Jim Dodge, The New Basics, and The Fannie Farmer Cookbook. The Cook's muffin was the winner since they were moist and light but there were too many spices that masked the flavor of the bran. Others were heavy, muddy, dry, spongy, or on the boring side, Jim Dodge's recipe being the best of the lot. I set off with the Cook's recipe to see if I could both simplify it and improve the flavor and texture.

The most obvious problem was the use of cinnamon, allspice, nutmeg, and vanilla – it read more like a pumpkin pie recipe than a muffin. I tested reducing the quantities but finally ended up eliminating all four ingredients altogether. The recipe used 1 1/4 cups all-purpose flour combined with 1/4 cup whole wheat. This was indeed just the right proportion – more wheat flavor made the muffins heavy; less made them flat-tasting. I tested rye flour which I found superb but either whole wheat or rye will do just fine.

The key ingredient is wheat bran which is sold both in natural supermarkets and regular stores. It is usually sold in flake form and looks nothing like a pebbly bran cereal – it is light in both texture and color. You can purchase either wheat or oat bran but testing proved that wheat bran was best for this application since the latter produced a heavier muffin.

I also wanted to streamline the recipe by melting the butter instead of creaming it. To my surprise, a blind taste test between these two methods proved that melted butter muffins (by far the easiest method) were moister and also more flavorful. It is best to start the recipe by mixing the melted butter with brown sugar rather than adding the butter at the end. This makes it easier to whisk out any lumps in the sugar and the butter has a chance to cool so that it does not jump start the baking soda, making the batter swell too quickly before it is scooped into the muffin tin.

Molasses was a key ingredient for its rich flavor but it had to be combined with dark brown sugar rather than white or light brown, the latter choices having too little flavor. The Cook's recipe calls for both buttermilk and sour cream. I found the latter unnecessary and dropped it, slightly increasing the amount of both butter and buttermilk. Two large eggs, as called for, were just right. I adjusted the baking soda, increasing it to a full teaspoon, and found that adding the wheat bran at the end of the mixing process reduces the amount of mixing. The recipe produces 12 muffins and since the batter is heavy, an ice cream scoop is recommended for filling the tin. Paper liners are suggested for this recipe for easy cleanup but are not essential.

BEST BRAN MUFFINS

Be sure to use wheat bran, a light, flaked product that is nothing like the hard, pebbly cereal. Do not substitute oat bran which produces a much heavier muffin.

1 1/4 cups all purpose flour
1/4 cup whole wheat or rye flour
1 1/4 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon baking soda
3/4 teaspoon salt
tablespoons unsalted butter (one stick) melted and cooled slightly 2/3 cup dark brown sugar
2 large eggs
3 tablespoons molasses
1 1/4 cup buttermilk
1 1/2 cups wheat bran or 1 cup wheat bran and 1/2 cup oat bran
1 cup raisins

1. Adjust oven rack to middle position and heat oven to 375 degrees. Butter a 12-cup standard size (1/2 cup) muffin tin or line each cup with a paper liner. Whisk the first five ingredients together in a medium bowl. Add the melted butter and sugar to the bowl of an electric mixer and beat on medium speed until well-combined, about 1 minute. Add the eggs one at a time beating 30 seconds after each addition scraping down the sides of the bowl as needed. Add the molasses and beat until well combined about 30 seconds longer. Add the buttermilk and half of the flour mixture and beat on low for 30 seconds. Add the rest of the flour mixture along with the bran and the raisins and beat on low for another 30 seconds or until combined. Finish mixing with a spatula.

2. Using an ice cream scoop or a large spoon evenly distribute the batter to the muffin cups. The batter will completely fill the cups. Bake until the muffins are lightly browned and spring back slightly when poked in the center or a toothpick inserted into the center comes out clean, about 20 to 25 minutes. Cool on a rack for five minutes before removing from muffin tin. Serve warm.

Makes 12 muffins.

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

David Brudnoy
CNC Film Critic

Solid acting, sleazy people

High Crimes (B-)

That old joke about military justice being to justice what military music is to music gets an incarnation both in this week's other review — my bad — and in "High Crimes," courtesy Charlie Grimes, a down-on-his-luck attorney (Morgan Freeman). Grimes, who was once in and of the military but was a pain in the nether regions there, is reduced to a law practice whose "associates" on his shingle amount to his dog, whose office is so uninspiring he jokes about the skills of his decorator, and whose sole client seems to be a zaftig lady of the evening. The introduction of Grimes would suggest a comedy, though it comes about 20 minutes into the film, which is already clearly not going to be laugh a minute.

Grimes is needed because he knows the enemy, the courts martial procedure and personnel. A nice young husband and soon-to-be-father (Jim Caviezel) has been arrested and charged with having been someone else during military engagements in Latin America, a multiple killer. His attorney wife (Ashley Judd) knows her husband is innocent, and she needs someone like Grimes to help her with her husband's defense, in part because the Army has assigned, as defense counsel, a greener than green newby, Embry (Adam Scott), who says in defense of himself "I'm older than I look" but acknowledges he has never won a case. (In the courts martial system, the defense rarely wins). Grimes good-naturedly calls Embry "Embryo," and it fits, until, before you know it, our heroine's seemingly sluttish sister (Amanda Peet) is making herself sexually comfortable with the anything but embryonic, yet goofily cute Embry.

These are funny bits in a film resolutely committed to the proposition that the military is sleazy, and that a top general (Bruce Davison, wearing so many medals you're amazed that he doesn't topple over) whose condescension drips, with his one-time chief aide and the whole system have set out to frame our innocent hero. Bad guys beat up our heroine, strange cars follow folks we like, seeming conspiracies connect obvious villains to seeming nice guys, and there's no end to time-tested conventions of the melodrama: terrible auto accidents, nasty medical complications, metaphoric red herrings and smelly fish routinely excluded by an unsympathetic judge from being allowed as evidence. This is one busy story thrashing about.

Based on Boston writer Joseph Finder's far better novel, "High Crimes" will do gratifying business in the court that counts these days — the box office — because the acting is fully up to code. Freeman has the been-there-done-that thing down to a science, yes, but he's masterful at it. Judd, with whom Freeman co-starred in "Kiss the Girls" a few years ago, makes pluckiness, grit and determination, always in a voluptuous package, her special thing. And Caviezel, whose beauty works especially well when his character develops along unexpected lines, may not yet be an actor of the first rank, but I can think of no performance by him that wasn't captivating. "High Crimes" isn't high art and you will get more pleasure from Finder's book. Still, even with a rickety plot structure and a final twist that pulls the rug out from way too much that went before, it is two hours not ill spent in the dark.

Transplanting trees and shrubs in spring

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the fringed yellow blossoms of the witch hazel finally fade, a procession of dazzling spring flowers begin to parade their colorful blooms across our landscapes. Divine clumps of daffodils raise their trumpets to the warm morning sunshine heralding the arrival of springtime and the rebirth of our gardens. The Cornelian cherry (Cornus mas) has burst into bloom displaying sunny yellow puffs of tiny flowers against a backdrop of handsome, cinnamon-colored, exfoliating bark. Have our forsythia bushes ever been more spectacular? A profusion of starry, lemon-tinted blossoms create saffron-colored clouds in nearly every landscape. Despite dry conditions, mild winter weather is producing a glorious fanfare of sensational spring bloom.

The delicate, rosy-purple blossoms of the Korean Rhododendron (R. mucronulatum) offer a welcome, albeit fleeting, contrast to the dominant yellow tones of our early spring blooms. The fuzzy, gray buds on star and saucer magnolias have swelled and split revealing hints of the large, showy blossoms hidden within these velvety capsules. With warmer temperatures in the forecast, these magnificent glistening, silky blooms should burst forth later this week. The Magnolia family offers many handsome specimens of multi-stemmed trees with spectacular, lightly fragrant, spring blossoms, although nearly every season the appearance of their voluptuous flowers coincides with a hard frost which often spoils their impressive blooms.

Spring is the time to transplant these showy magnolias and many deciduous trees and shrubs, ideally before their leaves appear. Soft-barked trees, such as magnolias, cherries, birches and dogwoods should only be moved in spring and broad-leafed evergreens, including rhododendrons, mountain laurels and andromedas, are also best transplanted at this time of year. Forsythia can be uprooted while flowering but should be relocated before the leaves appear.

It should be noted that many trees and shrubs entered the winter months deprived of moisture and transplanting will only compound the strains placed on these woody plants. It might be wise to delay transplanting drought-stressed plants until the fall considering our current conditions but for those plants that require spring transfers or must be moved due to poor location, construction, or other factors, the process should be completed as soon as possible. Place a hose at the base of the tree or shrub to be moved and allow water to trickle and thoroughly soak the root system. Repeat this process in a few days to ensure that the plant is well hydrated prior to transplanting.

Begin by preparing your new hole before digging up the plant to be transferred. The depth of the hole should be deep enough to enable you to reset the tree or shrub at the same level as it was previously growing. The width of your hole should be two to three times the diameter of the root ball of the plant to be positioned in it. Add superphosphate and moistened peat moss or compost to the soil taken from the hole. Avoid planting in heavy, wet soils. Many tree and shrub failures are the result of planting in poorly drained soils or due to planting too deeply. It is better to plant a little too shallow and apply a layer of mulch to cover the top of the root ball.

Once you have prepared your hole, you can begin the process of transplanting. For trees, it is important to create a root ball large enough to support the upper growth and a general rule is to allow at least one foot of root ball for each inch of diameter of the tree's trunk. For example, a tree having a trunk one inch in diameter would require a minimum root ball one foot across, or 6 inches from the base of the trunk all the way around.

Use a spade initially to slice the roots by cutting straight down. Then use a shovel to remove the soil beyond the perimeter of these roots and finally, dig beneath to gradually produce a well-rounded ball. Before lifting the plant out of the hole, it is wise to wrap the root ball with burlap to keep the soil intact around the roots and then tie it in place. If possible, reposition a large transplanted tree or shrub facing the same exposure as it was previously growing by marking the plant prior to digging with a piece of twine or determine its best side and position it accordingly before lowering it into the hole.

After placing the tree or shrub in the hole, backfill with your amended soil halfway and water thoroughly. Allow the water to settle and then finish filling the hole. Firm the soil around the plant. Create a moat of mounded soil to keep water contained and leave a hose trickling at its base until the ground is thoroughly wet. Trees and shrubs need a slow, deep watering to reach all roots. Add a layer of mulch over the area to reduce evaporation and prevent weeds but avoid allowing the mulch to touch the bark as this may lead to diseases or insect infestations.

"It's great for winter birthdays, because you're always looking for different things to do," he notes. "It's fun and educational at the same time."

In another room of the museum there's a sand pendulum, where children can make their own sand designs, and a wooden train that McDaniel says is "good for gross motor skills." Austin Vitagliano, 3, of Kingston is kept very busy with the sand pendulum, as he pours sand into the container that he hopes will create some original design.

"He loves it here," Austin's mother Michelle says. "I bought the three month membership pass because he likes it so much."

Another item is the "Impressions Screen" that came from the San Jose Children's Discovery Museum, and which McDaniel said took three people three months to put together. The densely meshed screen has 20,000 pins, all which had to be capped on one side, put through the screen, and then capped on the other end.

Rachel Hughes and her cousins are busy making handprints through the screen. Driving down from Dorchester, the group of children and adults have been here four or five times before, Rachel's mother Geraldine Hughes says.

"It's much better than the one in town (Boston) for two to five year olds," Geraldine Hughes said, adding that it's less crowded and children get more of a chance to experience all the hands-on exhibits.

In another room there are many toys and blocks, like Brio and Thomas the Train, as well as a stage, changing room, and many costumes for children to dress up in. On one wall there are "What do you spy?" collages, and on another, a design challenge wall and wood race wall.

There is a food shopping area, like an outdoor market, a mail cubicle, medical cubical, wooden kitchen fixtures, and a small library area with books. And, despite all the interesting items the museum has now, McDaniel says, "We have new exhibits coming in next month."

The museum fills 4,500 square feet of space, with ceilings of natural wood and skylights. When asked where the idea for a South Shore Children's Museum came from, McDaniel said, "It was my wife's idea; she's an early childhood educator."

"It's a happy place," McDaniel says, adding that the museum is busy every day of the week. "People are enjoying themselves and it's really stress free. And we don't sell anything — that takes a lot of pressure off parents."

The museum is open Monday through Saturday 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. and on Sunday from noon to 6 p.m. Admission is $4.25, and anyone wanting more information can call McDaniel at 781-829-6999.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 10

A Mars/Uranus alignment may generate stormy astrological weather in the early morning hours. Allow extra time to get where you are going. There may be unexpected setbacks or distractions. Give greater attention to accuracy, details. The Pisces moon becomes inactive at 1:31 p.m., when it aligns with Mars. At 5:40 p.m. the moon enters Aries, and the final windup to this month's new moon begins.

THURSDAY, APRIL 11

This is a day that can go either way. The dark side of an Aries new moon may spark emotional thunderstorms. Others may be irritable, anxious, impatient. On the other hand, a harmonious alignment of Mercury and Uranus prompts you to keep an open mind, look for the silver lining. Zero in on projects that have been problematic. You can work out the glitches and find solutions. Follow your instincts. Spend time alone. Look within for answers. New inspirations and insights may come, if you take the quiet space and time to listen.

FRIDAY, APRIL 12

Wake up in a good mood. Tackle jobs that need a finishing touch, handle routine chores, run errands. Postpone beginning new projects until next week. The new moon culminates at 3:21 p.m., 23-degrees of the sign Aries. Let fun and games top your agenda this evening.

SATURDAY, APRIL 13

The Aries moon aligns with Mercury and becomes inactive at 5:52 a.m. A Taurus moon takes over at 5:55 a.m., setting the stage for a relaxing weekend. Mercury also enters Taurus at 6:11 a.m., remaining there until April 30. Mars enters Gemini at 1:36 p.m. until May 28. At this time the green light goes on for starting new projects, making major decisions and purchases. A lunar alignment to Jupiter makes this a great evening for social or romantic activities.

SUNDAY, APRIL 14

This is a day to kick back and enjoy life to the fullest. The moon travels in Taurus and aligns with its planetary ruler, Venus, at 2:46 p.m. If you have work projects to accomplish, they will come together smoothly. Influences continue to rate high for launching important ventures in your business or personal life.

MONDAY, APRIL 15

A Taurus moon continues to generate a laidback mood. It may be difficult to get motivated, if you are working. At 12:53 p.m. the moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. Influences begin to turn around at 4:56 p.m., when the moon enters lively Gemini. A rough spot is in effect between 5:56-8:56 p.m., when the moon conjoins with Mars. Slow down; sidestep stubborn, obstinate behavior. Choose your words carefully.

TUESDAY, APRIL 16

The Gemini moon generates an upbeat mood today and tomorrow. However, you must have a clear plan of action and stick to it, if you want to be productive. People will be talkative, sociable. This is a great day to launch sales and promotion campaigns or to develop creative writing projects. A lunar contact to Saturn at 3:56 p.m. reminds you to handle responsibilities, fulfill promises. This alignment may bring a quiet, lull period in the day and offers an opportunity to rest, regroup.

Trying to make smoking history

Town to consider tougher regulations

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Smoking has long been glamorized in our country. From the Marlboro Man to Joe Camel, cigarettes have been a part of our collective conscience for some time.

However, approximately 450,000 people die in this country every year from diseases related to smoking, making it the number one killer in the United States.

"The dangers of smoking and second-hand smoke are incredible."

— Dr. Joseph Godzik, health agent

Cohasset is part of a group of South Shore towns trying to protect its residents from the dangers of smoking.

The Board of Health is holding a hearing next week regarding youth access regulations which concerns the sale of tobacco products to minors. It is expected to strengthen the regulations to further deter stores from selling to those 18 and younger.

Glenn Pratt receives Citizen of Year honors

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Glenn Pratt, the Cohasset Mariner's Citizen of the Year, attracted a crowd Sunday as upwards of 100 family members, town officials and friends packed the banquet room at Kimball's By the Sea to wish him well.

The King Street resident admitted to being a little nervous. As is the case with Citizens of the Year, they are more comfortable out of limelight – doing their good works behind the scenes.

Pratt, who was the force behind the new Gold Star Mothers Memorial at Woodside Cemetery, was honored for a lifetime of service to the town. His efforts included serving as president of the Community Center at a time when its future was in doubt, tirelessly leading the effort for more cemetery space in town, his service on the Planning Board and Water Commission, and countless "smaller" deeds such as making sure the Festival on the Common has electricity every year, buying T-shirts for youth teams or a new scoreboard for the high school gym.

Public input sought on sidewalks, lights

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Do you want to have a say about new sidewalks and lighting for Cohasset Village? If so, then here's your chance.

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a private business working in conjunction with the village task force, has installed six different sidewalk displays along with three lighting choices along James Brook Walkway across from French Memories and next to the Citgo station.

"We want to know what the residents think will look best here."

— Dean Rizzo, Cohasset Revitalization Corporation

New sidewalks and lights will be incorporated into the village revitalization project, expected to be completed in 2006.

"The primary purpose for the displays is that we want to seek more input from the community," said CRC director Dean Rizzo. "We want to know what the residents think will look best here."

Rizzo, who said the display won't be taken down till early June, set up the sidewalk samples with a short description of the walking surface as well as a picture of that choice installed in another town. Residents are encouraged to fill out the survey that's provided at

Car love affair is taxing

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Americans have had a love affair with the automobile since the 1950s when interstate highways were constructed to facilitate motorists' desire to travel.

So it should come as no surprise that Cohasset residents also love their cars and during the boom years of the 1990s, bought more expensive models.

How else could the huge increase in excise tax be explained?

The excise tax formula that came into being to help municipalities pay for repairs to local roads hasn't changed since Prop. 2-1/2 was enacted back in 1981.

But today, Cohasset — a small town with a fairly stable population of some 7,546 people living in 3,015 households — has no less than 6,904 motor vehicles including 4,125 cars and 2,055 light trucks, according to the Registry of Motor Vehicles. SUVs are considered cars and light trucks are pick-up trucks, says David Shaw, registry spokesman.

The registry provides the billing information to cities and towns, although it doesn't set the rates and uses none of the money for its own budget.

In fiscal year 2001, that ended last June 30, Cohasset collected a whopping $1,135,920 in excises. Back in fiscal year 1982 — after Prop. 2-1/2 took effect and actually lowered the excise tax — the town collected a mere $216,430. In fiscal year 1992, which was during the last recession, the town collected $559,273 in excise taxes. Since fiscal year 1995, the town's automobile excise taxes have been on a steady climb passing the $1 million mark in fiscal year 2000.

So it should come as no surprise that the legislature is taking a look at an excise tax hike. The money would go to cities and towns as a way to offset a 10 percent cut in local aid. A 10 percent cut in local aid translates into $200,000 less for Cohasset in fiscal year 2003, which starts July 1.

But a 20 percent hike in excise takes — or $5 more for every $1,000 of motor vehicle value — would translate into about $226,000 more for the town, using the fiscal year 2002 collection figure.

The excise tax rate has been set for the past 20 years at $25 per $1,000 of value of the motor vehicle based on the applicable percent-

Surface water protection plan

The Cohasset Water Commission is preparing a Surface Water Supply Protection Plan for Lily Pond and the Aaron River Reservoir, under a grant from the state Department of Environmental Protection.

The Plan will be discussed at a public meeting being held Thursday, April 25, 7:30 p.m., at the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant, 339 King St.

"This purpose of this Plan is to protect the sources of our public drinking water," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission. "We invite all residents of Cohasset to review the Plan and to provide comments by April 26, the comment deadline."

Copies of the Plan are available for review at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library and at the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant.

Vision and Goals workshop May 4

The Growth and Development Committee invites the public to a Vision and Goals workshop to be held Saturday, May 4 from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m. in the Town Hall auditorium. The purpose of this meeting is to finalize a draft vision statement that describes "Cohasset in the Year 2020." The final vision will guide specific goals and implementation strategies in the areas of town growth, land use, housing, transportation, services and facilities, natural and cultural resources and economic development. The draft vision is detailed in the Cohasset Compass newsletter, available at Town Hall, or by calling Liz Harrington, Town Planner, at 383-3517.

Water main flushing to start

The Cohasset Water Department will begin its annual flushing of water mains on Monday, April 22. Flushing will be conducted from 9 p.m.-midnight on Monday (April 22), Tuesday (April 23), and Thursday (April 25), and will continue the next week on Monday (April 29), Tuesday (April 30), and Thursday (May 1).

On April 22, the flushing will start on King Street and cover the area between King Street and North/South Main Streets, and then move to Beechwood Street and back to King Street.

"Flushing the water mains will help improve water quality," said Water Commission Chairman John McNabb. "By removing accumulated sediment from water mains, flushing improves the taste and odor of tap water and removes friction in the water mains which allows the water to flow better."

Cohasset residents are cautioned to avoid doing laundry, running dish washers, or showing during the flushing, and are advised to turn on an outside faucet the next morning for a few minutes until the water runs clear. The flushing may cause a temporary discoloration of the water which can be remedied by running the outside faucet.

Iron Out is available free at the Lily Pond Treatment Plant, 339 King St., which will remove stains from any laundry which may be affected by the flushing. The Water Dept. office is open from 7:30 am – 3: p.m., Monday – Friday.

Residents may call the Water Department at 383-0057 if they have any questions.

Two village eateries sold

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

While there were no 'For Sale' signs posted in the windows to alert customers, both Really Great Pizza and Silver Spoon have been sold.

The sale of RGP will become effective on May 1 and ownership has already changed hands for the Silver Spoon. While some may think the sales came because of a declining customer base and reduced revenues, that is not the case.

Denise Bismore, former owner of Silver Spoon, said it's family circumstances that is pulling she and her husband, Garry, away from the business.

With a toddler at home and another baby on the way, the Bismores decided their work at the Silver Spoon was too much of commitment.

"It's just consuming too much of our time," Denise said. "If we didn't have another baby on the way we may still be running the restaurant."

Bismore is proud of strides she has made while owning the business for six years. She said it has quadrupled in size in that time and the customer base has expanded rapidly. She added it is the customers she will miss the most when she leaves.

"I definitely considered all of the customers my friends and family," she said. "I will miss them all dearly."The Bismores will stay in the catering business for the foreseeable future out of their corporate cafeteria in Norwell.

The couple replacing the Bismores at the Silver Spoon is Jack and Carol Stafford from Quincy. The duo has been in business for more than 30 years and jumped at the opportunity to purchase the restaurant ,which will afford them the luxury of working closer to home and together.

"The size seemed right and the location is fantastic," Carol said. "Plus, working with my husband is an added bonus."

The two said they don't plan on overhauling the restaurant as it is currently set up quite well. They have tweaked the menu somewhat and will continue to tinker with it until they are happy. So far, they have reworded the menu as well as adding some more sandwiches, which they think are "more widely appealing."

"I feel real lucky to have a great spot in the downtown area."

— Sheldon Karp, new owner of RGP

Jack has been in the business for some time and feels he can bring a lot to the village area.

"I have plenty of experience and I've proven to be a success in quality wherever I have gone," he said. "I concentrate on making the customer happy and hopefully, they'll return."

Currently, the couple is keeping the same hours as the previous owners, Tuesday-Saturday 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. and Sundays, 8 a.m. to 2 p.m., but said they are taking it one day at a time.

"If we feel it's necessary to stay open some nights, we will," Jack said. "We're here to make the community happy."

RGP changes hands

Another restaurant that has been bringing smiles to the faces of downtown diners for some time is RGP, which will have its ownership change hands in a couple of weeks.

Current owner Chris Peterson reiterated what the Bismores said and asserted he is not leaving because of financial reasons.

Peterson, who has owned the restaurant for four years, said he will be moving to Durango, Col. with wife Jennifer and their two children where they will open up another RGP.

"The time was right to move," he said. "The town's been great and the people are wonderful but we decided to go out west."

Peterson had no prior restaurant experience prior to opening RGP and said it was difficult learning the ropes. He said he hopes to open a similar place in Colorado when he gets out there.

Taking his place on Main Street is Sheldon Karp from Marshfield who previously owned a large deli in South Boston. Karp said he was looking for a place to work at around the South Shore and stumbled upon RGP.

"I love the town and the people," Karp said. "I feel real lucky to have a great spot in the downtown area."

Karp said he plans to keep the current menu but will be adding to it. He plans to add a frying machine so he can sell anything from french fries to fried seafood, he hopes to sell ice cream and also plans to make homemade pasta dishes available.

Other changes Karp intends to make includes applying for a liquor license so he can sell beer and wine and expanding the seating area of the restaurant.

SBAB tax hike solution?

MBTA money could help

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The town's financial team has come up with a plan that could help offset the increase in taxes should the state school building reimbursement money for the town's $42 million school projects be delayed.

Town Manager Mark Haddad told Town Meeting for every year the state delays reimbursement it will cost the average homeowner in Cohasset an additional $800 in real estate taxes.

"This is unacceptable," Haddad said.

The state will ultimately reimburse the town for about 60 percent of the cost of the projects, which include expanding and renovating the middle-high and Deer Hill schools.

He explained the town has been setting aside interest earned on bond anticipation notes for the school construction projects and placing it in the town's rainy day account, dubbed the stabilization fund.

"In addition, we will be receiving $1.6 million from the MBTA for the railroad right-of-way," Haddad said. "It is my recommendation to the Board of Selectmen that this money be placed in the stabilization fund."

Haddad explained when interest is factored in, this would bring the stabilization fund close to $3 million.

"This will save the average taxpayer about $500 a year and still leave a healthy balance in the stabilization fund."

— Town Manager Mark Haddad

He said for every year the state delays reimbursement — expected to be from three to six years — the town could transfer $500,000 out of the stabilization fund to offset the debt service payment on the long-term school bond.

"This will save the average taxpayer about $500 a year and still leave a healthy balance in the stabilization fund," he said.

Last fall, town Finance Director Michael Buckley discovered on the state Department of Education Web site that the department planned to cutback on the amount of money it puts annually toward reimbursement of new school building projects by more than half due to the recession. The drastic cut in funding means schools on the waiting list for reimbursement — expected to be only five years — would have to wait longer depending on how far down the list they were.

Buckley sounded the alarm and Cohasset has led the effort ever since to have the DOE fund the school building assistance at customary levels.

"We have met with the governor, the (state) Board of Education and our state legislators to bring this issue to the forefront," Haddad said. "We have also notified all other communities in Massachusetts that will be affected by this and led a letter-writing campaign to apply pressure on the legislature and governor to honor this commitment to provide funding in five years as was promised.

"We will continue to lead this effort," he said.

Although selectmen have not taken an official vote yet, they are largely in favor of the plan, Haddad said.

Memorial bench to be installed

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The sudden death of Jesse Sargent, 16, last month of a bacterial infection came as a shock, even to those who didn't know him.

But no one wants to forget the high school student who loved sports and was a friend to many.

A bench will be installed in Jesse's honor on the Beechwood baseball field, a place he frequently visited both to play sports and enjoy friends' company. The bench will serve as a permanent memorial to Jesse.

"I hope there's something in this that the family can take in a positive light," said John Kimball, who organized the effort.

Kimball, 17 Doane St., was moved by the tragedy and decided he wanted to help. Though he lives close to the family, he has never met them.

"I have a little boy and have no idea what they're going through," he said. "It's a small gesture but one I hope will add something to the family's day."

Kimball added he lost his father as a teenager so he has a sense of the devastation that the family is experiencing.

"It was a hard time for me," he said. "It's always stuck with me the support that people gave me and I'm trying to give back."

The selectmen unanimously approved the installation of the bench at their meeting earlier in the month and all agreed that this was something that needed to be done.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said it would be positive way to remember Jesse.

"This is a great memorial to Jesse," Haddad said. "It's a wonderful tribute to someone we'll all miss."

Kimball anticipates that around $700 will be needed to raised in order to install the bench. Any excess money will be donated to the Floating Hospital in Boston where Jesse underwent chemotherapy.

Kimball said he expects the bench to be ready in about six to eight weeks.

"It's nice that he'll always have a place in town," Kimball said.

Jesse, who was a student at Cohasset High and fought two battles with Hodgkin's Disease, a form of cancer, passed away from a bacterial meningococcal infection that can cause meningitis.

His family described him as a fun-loving teenager who loved to watch sports. That's another reason the site at Beechwood was chosen.

"It's nice to have the bench close to a place Jesse so enjoyed," Kimball said.

If you are interested making a contribution, a fund has been set up at the Rockland Trust Bank, 775 Chief Justice Cushing Highway and all donations should be sent there.

Birds like to call Straits Pond home

30 species spotted on local bird walk

By Nancy Kramer
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The tree swallows were sighted looking for clean nesting boxes on the Straits Pond area bird walk April 6, led by birder, Sally Avery. More than 20 people, mostly from Hull and a few from Cohasset and Hingham, attended the walk around the pond .

Thirty different species were observed including great egrets, killdeer, Northern flicker, Carolina wrens, brown headed cowbirds, downy woodpecker, common grackles and the usual birds, ducks and gulls sighted on other bird walks.

The white breeding patches of the great cormorant were observed on Black Rock Island through a spotting scope. And an osprey made a grand entrance overhead with a fish clenched in its talons at the West Corner area.

While we were birding, five Straits Pond Watershed Association (SPWA) volunteers were on the pond scooping up mud samples to count midge larvae before the Town's scheduled Abate application on Monday. Another midge larvae count will be done this Saturday and once each month after that to test the effectiveness of the pesticide.

Volunteers who rowed and counted Chironomid midge larvae were Hull residents: Ann Murray, SPWA Secretary; Margo Clerkin, Hull Conservation Agent; Lawry Reid, SPWA President; Rob Gilman, Meteorologist; and Jay Hall, Biologist for Coler & Colantino.

Elder Affairs honors volunteers

On the occasion of Volunteer Recognition Week, April 21 to 27, Cohasset Elder Affairs would like to recognize and thank the many volunteers who make its programs and services possible.

Volunteers help to staff the office, serve on the board of directors, drive the vans, provide transportation to medical appointments, provide respite and companionship for elders in their homes, plan and lead some of our classes and activities; and plan, cook, serve and clean up for special events such as the recent Valentine's tea and the St. Patrick's Day luncheon.

Volunteers range in age from 2 years old (who accompany their mothers to help serve lunch every Tuesday and Wednesday) to folks in their 80s, including some high school students that help in the office, and adults of all ages who share their time and talents with the elders of this community. Cohasset is a town that is known for its volunteer spirit. Many thanks to everyone who volunteers!

Something lost, something Gaines at First Parish Church

Part-time minister in the church pulpit

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Reverend Charles Gaines has been in this position before. More than five years ago, Gaines served as the interim minister at the First Parish Church on N. Main Street. Now, his title has changed but his mission is the same.

"I'm here to get the congregation organized," Gaines said. "I'm going to work with the church to develop a better understanding of what its mission is."

First Parish has hit hard times in the recent past. Over the last six years, the church has had six different ministers. Sadly, two pastors passed away including Ed Atkinson, a beloved minister of the church for more than 20 years, who died in 1995, and his replacement, the Rev. Elizabeth Tarbox, who was very well liked but was only able to serve about 18 months before succumbing to cancer. The church has also had three were interim ministers, and the latest pastor, Jennifer Justice, left in December. According to church officials, Justice left because of disagreements over the direction of the church.

Gaines, an Acton resident, is not an interim minister, who would be expected to stay on the job for one to two years, but is part-time. He also serves as a consultant to the church.

"The most important thing is that the congregation should come to a sense of unity as to what they want in their next minister," he said. "I'll also be working on improving the organizational structure of the church."

"I'm here to get the congregation organized."

Gaines has plenty of experience in consulting, as well as being a minister. He has been a Unitarian minister for more than 40 years and just completed a four-year ministry with the First Parish in Groton. During his stay at that church, the congregation became the seventh-fastest growing, mid-sized church in the Unitarian Universalist Association.

The First Parish in Cohasset has about 250 members and has experienced a modest drop in membership during the turmoil. However, Gaines said attendance for the Sunday services has grown since he was there in 1995, and he expects the congregation to expand once a new minister is appointed.

Currently, the church is searching for an interim pastor that would assume the position until a full-time minister is found. Woody Chittick, head of the search committee for the interim minister, said he hopes to have someone in place by June 1.

"We have a couple candidates and we will be interviewing them in the next few weeks," he said. "We're looking for who is going to be the best fit for the church."

Chittick added Gaines has been a welcomed addition to the church family in lieu of a permanent minister.

"He's doing a great job," Chittick said. "He brings an enthusiasm and an ability to listen to all types of people."

Gaines said he is doing his best to help the church through this transition period. He added the minister's position is the focal point of a congregation and offers a sense of continuity to a church. The First Parish has been lacking that sense of cohesiveness and he hopes to reinvigorate its spirit.

"It hasn't been an easy time for this church but there's a resiliency here," Gaines said. "I think everyone is on the same page theologically but there needs to be a consensus on how we express our beliefs."

Gaines is currently meeting with various church groups to get a better understanding of where they stand. He is focusing on preparing a quasi-mission statement, which will outline his reflections on what he's heard as well as recommendations for the future.

Gaines hopes the church takes his report to heart.

"I've been here before so there's some level of trust already established," he said. "I hope there will be a renewed faith that the future can evolve in a positive way."

Gaines, who has worked as a consultant for the last 15 years but considers himself "retired," is at the church three days a week including Sundays.

Dog days at the shelter

It's only April, but for the Scituate Animal Shelter the dog days are here. We're not referring to yesterday's sweltering 90-degree heat, we're talking about the canine population explosion at the Driftway facility.

The situation is "paws" for concern.

The shelter can house up to 16 dogs, but has rarely housed more than six at a time. Right now, 10 dogs have taken up residence, five are boarding with local families, and three more are expected within the week.

Shelter director Joan McCafferty said the unprecedented number of dogs has put a burden on the all-volunteer staff and is driving up veterinary and food costs. Each of the dogs have kennels that must be cleaned and require six to seven walks each day not to mention quality socializing time with humans. While McCafferty's volunteers are dedicated, more helping hands for all those paws would be greatly appreciated.

Food and other pet supply donations are also needed.

Unfortunately, as the number of dogs at the shelter has increased, the contributions collected in those supermarket bins (at Shaw's and Stop & Shop in Cohasset and the Scituate Marketplace) have gone way down. Shelter volunteer Cheryl Coates checks the bins and says they've been pretty empty lately. Cat litter, and canned dog and cat food is in big demand.

A smaller-than-usual feline population — the shelter currently houses 30 cats rather than the usual 50 or more — has made the quarters a little less cramped, McCafferty noted.

But getting all of these dogs — many of them still puppies and some pure breds — adopted is McCafferty's goal. Since 1993, the shelter has placed 1,850 animals in loving homes and is on track to break an annual record of 234 this year alone.

If you're considering getting a family pet, think of the shelter first. There are many benefits to adopting from a shelter. First, all the animals are up to date on their shots and are spayed and neutered before being adopted. Dogs at the shelter also get a head start on training which can make a world of difference. Too often, families who bring home an adorable puppy for Christmas or someone's birthday, find that six or eight months down the road, their unmanageable dog is decidedly less adorable and they wind up on the shelter's doorstep.

McCafferty doesn't turn animals away, no matter what their history may be. Strays and abandoned animals find a clean, safe place to stay at the no-kill shelter until they can be adopted.

The fee for adopting a dog from the Scituate Animal Shelter is $50 and well worth every penny.

Because the biggest benefit to adopting a shelter animal is the unconditional love you receive in return.

I happen to know this personally. The proof is in the big kisses I get from my 10-year old black lab mix, Clyde.

For more information on adopting a pet or volunteering at the Scituate Animal Shelter call (781) 545-8703.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Pet food

TO THE EDITOR:

I volunteer at the Scituate Animal Shelter. One of my jobs is to collect the donated food from the yellow wooden bins marked "Scituate Animal Shelter" at Shaw's and Stop & Shop in Cohasset, and at the Scituate Marketplace in Scituate.

Lately, the bins have been a bit empty, and not coincidentally, our panty shelves at the shelter have been completely bare of canned dog food, and light on canned cat food.

I bet a lot of you have pet dogs and/or cats in your homes. As you read this letter, think about that pet The next time he or she rolls over so you can scratch a belly, or chases a ball, or cuddles on your lap, remember that warm feeling, and when you're in the grocery store next, donate a can of food in honor of that beloved pet. If everyone would donate just a can or two each time they shop, we'd never run out. Every time you donate a can of food, the shelter is able to work better within its humble budget and provide medical care for an abandoned cat or dog, rather than buying cases of canned food. And the best part? Since we're a no-kill shelter, everyone receives endless love, medical care and sound nutrition... until they find a home. We serve Scituate, Cohasset, Norwell and Hull.

Look for our yellow wooden trunk "donation bins" at Shaws, Stop & Shop and Scituate Marketplace - we're always right by the checkout counters.

Brudnoy's talk was just that

TO THE EDITOR:

Dear Mr. Goodwin,

Thank you for your kind and thoughtful criticism pertaining to our annual meeting. Concerning our choice of guest speaker, David Brudnoy, and his choice of subject matter, I would like to clarify a few points for your benefit as well as the benefit of all concerned.

It was our intention to bring to our membership, and the invited public, an interesting, informed, educated, eloquent, dynamic speaker, worthy of your attention. It was not without tremendous effort that a speaker of such celebrity could be made available. So, when it came time to consider the topic for Mr. Brudnoy's talk we chose not to limit him in what he could and could not say. I don't suppose we could have, even if we wanted to. Other than mentioning that we are a business organization, we let him loose, so to speak. We did not want to dictate to him or limit him. After all, where's the sense of hiring a consultant if you give him the answers beforehand?

I'm sure that the disaster of September 11 is a topic that transcends almost all others. It is an event that has touched us all at least a little, and some more than a lot. It's not going away. Some think it may get worse before it gets better. We have a volatile world situation brewing in the middle east. (Look how it's developed since our annual meeting until now.) Mr. Brudnoy cannot be faulted for bringing this to our attention. David Brudnoy will say what's on his mind. I suppose all attending could have expected him to be controversial.

But please remember this: Mr. Brudnoy's talk was just that. It was his talk. It was nothing more and was certainly nothing less. Was it the position of your Chamber of Commerce? No.

Does the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce want to put itself in the position of alienating any of its members? I certainly don't think so.

If we have offended anyone at all, that is not our intention. We need to put this into context, and putting this into context is an exercise that I think is worthwhile. I apologize for any and all ill will that this has created in a time when we are talking about "building relationships." We welcome your involvement, as well as the suggestions of all others. I hope that we can keep the discussion going. People are talking. Ideas are being shared. Relationships are being built.

Domenic Micarelli
On behalf of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce

Mr. Micarelli's letter is in response to Mr. Goodwin's letter that appeared in the Mariner.

Runway meeting sought with FAA

TO THE EDITOR:

Ms. Jane Garvey, Administrator
Federal Aviation Administration

Dear Administrator Garvey:

On behalf of the three South Shore towns most heavily impacted by air traffic from Logan Airport, we write to you to express our deep concern about the impact that the new runway 14/32 will have on our environment, citizens' health, property values, and about the severe burdens that existing air traffic currently impose on our citizens and communities.

Over the past two years we have retained experts to help us analyze the data provided by Massport in its Final Environmental Impact Review and have found it to be severely flawed. We have spent considerable time designing alternative flight paths for both arriving and departing jets, routing them over the ocean to reduce their impact on the South Shore. Despite the fact that our suggested routes are easily executed, harm no one else, and greatly benefit South Shore residents, we have received no cooperation from Massport. The regional FAA officials have been supportive but unwilling to act without Massport's approval.

We urgently request a personal meeting with you to express our concerns regarding present and proposed Logan operations before you make a decision on the Airside Improvement Project. While Boston would be most convenient for us, we would be pleased to come to Washington if that turns out to be better for you.

In addition to the undersigned, with us will be Ralph Dormitzer from Cohasset, Steve Lathrop from Hull, Bill Golden and Rod Hobson, a retired United Airlines pilot who has been particularly helpful to us in understanding air traffic issues.

Fred Koed, Chair, Board of Selectmen, Cohasset

Katherine Reardon, Chair, Board of Selectmen, Hingham, Philip Lemnios, Town Manager, Hull

Editors note: This letter was in selectmen's correspondence.

Cancer link

TO THE EDITOR:

With regard to the walks, marches, marathons, walkathons and other such activities whose purpose is to raise funds for research into cancer and specifically breast cancer, people should be told the truth and especially young women should learn that there is a very definite medical and scientific link between abortion and certain types of contraceptives and breast cancer.

Not every woman who has breast cancer has had an abortion or used contraceptives, but there is no valid doubt of the connection. The abortion industry may be sitting on a time bomb of legal problems.

Lightkeepers to offer Beacon Award

Cohasset Lightkeepers Beacon Award is to provide unsolicited financial recognition to a high school senior who has voluntarily served the community of Cohasset.

This is an opportunity to nominate someone other than yourself who has demonstrated a focus on the future by enrolling for further education or starting up their own business. Just as lightkeepers served the coastal South Shore community, the nominee should be noted for selfless service to others. Up to $1,000 will be awarded directly to the selected senior. Nomination forms are available at the Guidance Office and in Town Hall outside the Recreation Dept. office. (Cohasset Lightkeepers Corp., PO Box 514)

Stewards of the natural world

FAITH REFLECTIONS

KEN READ-BROWN

Snow drops... crocuses... peepers... skunk cabbage... songbirds...: A spring symphony of sound and sight has begun and will rise to a crescendo in the next few weeks. And though the various religious traditions celebrate spring in quite different ways, our innate response to spring's returning warmth and to the sights and sounds of the season has a spiritual dimension which is universal and which transcends all our differences.

Here we are of course privileged to be able to enjoy spring in the midst of extraordinary natural beauty. Whether at the harbor, World's End, Wompatuck Park... we are blessed with an abundance of natural riches. Yet in poignant contrast, thousands of acres of undeveloped land outside these parks and reservations may still be developed, and we hear daily the sounds of almost nonstop traffic on our roads and in the skies sometimes drowning out those peepers and birds.

But we all know there is still much to be done in relation to environmental challenges of all kinds locally and globally...

Clearly all of this presents environmental and social challenges, but it presents a spiritual challenge as well. The creation story shared in the Christian, Jewish, and Muslim traditions calls human beings to be stewards of the natural world; and the spiritual traditions of the peoples here long before Europeans arrived call us to live in balance and harmony with the natural world.

Several decades ago, Rachel Carson prophetically warned of a "silent spring" unless we limited the use of dangerous pesticides which were threatening the songbirds. We heeded her call well enough to have put off the day of reckoning. But we all know there is still much to be done in relation to environmental challenges of all kinds locally and globally as we work to preserve for future generations the peepers and songbirds of spring and the abundance of life in all seasons. And whatever else this work is — social, political, economic — it is spiritual work too, good spiritual work we all can share.

So, we celebrated the religious holy days of this season, each in our own faith community; and together we celebrate the universal new festival of Earth Day on April 22. Whatever our faith tradition may be, then, may we all speak and write and vote and live from the depths of our love for the interdependent natural web of life of which we are a part.

The Rev. Ken Read-Brown is pastor of First Parish Church (Old Ship) in Hingham.

Celebrate Earth Day in Cohasset

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Don't forget, Cohasset celebrates Earth Day — Saturday April 20.

Earth Day is April 22, but Cohasset is celebrating it on Saturday April 20. Join us at the Town Hall at 10 a.m. to help clean up parts of our town. We'll go to Peppermint Brook off Pond Street, and Ellms Meadow off Cushing Road, and others are cleaning up various parts of shoreline . Meet the board members and staff at Town Hall at 10 a.m., and we'll go to those areas most deserving of our attention. We'll supply garbage bags and tools, and free T-shirts for the first 50 volunteers.

We'll supply garbage bags and tools, and free T-shirts for the first 50 volunteers.

Other activities for Earth Day

- Boat rides from the Hagerty Property using the rowing dories the high school kids built, to go out and visit the sites where water sampling will be taken this summer. Jack Buckley's CMS volunteers will describe what the kids do, and act as recruiters for this summer and next year. They'll also be picking up any trash receptacles from the shore line.
- The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will conduct a guided tour and walk through Great Brewster Woods - learn about invasive species and lots more. Meet Meg Moore at the Town Hall at 10 a.m. for a leisurely two-hour tour these beautiful woods.
- Special Earth Day clinic and thermometer exchange.

Help support Cohasset's Earth day activities next Saturday and you'll be doing yourself, as well as the Town a favor.

Greenbush opponents find daily food for hope

GREENBUSH VIEW

MARTHA A. R. BEWICK

While the MBTA project team is setting up offices in Weymouth's Jackson Square, the Greenbush debate continues. It is playing out on various local and state fields. It is set within continuing environmental concerns, state budget crises, Central Artery investigations, media questions, and political shifts. Greenbush opponents find daily food for hope, in spite of the press statements of the Executive Office of Transportation and Construction (EOTC), and the opposition lives.

Take the environment, for one. AfTA has hired its own environmental specialists who have successfully contradicted MBTA findings. The organization will continue to monitor any actions taken by the T or its contractors to ensure that the environmental process is not short-circuited. Meanwhile, AfTA has been working to educate political leaders throughout the Commonwealth, that the construction of alternatives to Greenbush would save $300 million in state funds, which could be far better invested in transit in economically deprived areas.

Since the Greenbush/T project folk haven't yet filed with the Army Corps of Engineers for required wetlands permits, which could trigger a full federal Environmental Impact Statement, this is an important series of actions to monitor. If the Army Corps requires a full federal EIS, it would be the first time that the impact of the train on residents and businesses of our towns would be undertaken. The "human factor" would finally be considered.

Here's what's happening on the local environmental front. George Loring, Weymouth's herring warden, reported that smelt had been spotted in Hingham's Town Brook during this spawning season. Since Town Brook is an anadromous fish run, no construction can take place from March through June which affect the brook. There is a question whether the construction schedule of the tunnel under Hingham Square, and relocated Town Brook in North Street, will have to be lengthened to accommodate the requirement. Accommodation of the Weymouth smelt, and Rte. 53 traffic, led to a $30 million underpass in Weymouth. We don't yet know whether the Hingham smelt are held in as high esteem as those in the next town, but look forward to equal treatment for our smelt.

These are good turtle days in the vernal pools, and the spotters are looking to identify the rare species. Meanwhile, a hearing scheduled by the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) for an on-site tour of the track and wetlands areas in Hingham for April 12 was rescheduled, when it was discovered that the DEP had inadvertently failed to provide advance notice of the site visit to Hingham's Conservation Commission.

Previously, the Conservation Commission had denied the MBTA request for permits to construct the train in the wetlands, because the train project violates environmental performance standards. The MBTA has requested from the DEP a "superceding order of conditions" from the Conservation Commission's denial of the project. Since the meeting is to be the only opportunity to register concerns with DEP prior to the staff action, it is a very important step.

Greenbush/T project folk haven't yet filed with the Army Corps of Engineers for required wetlands permits, which could trigger a full federal Environmental Impact Statement.

Fortunately, Hingham's Conservation Commission Chairman Joseph Fisher was able to leave clients in his office briefly, to express the concerns of the Commission to DEP staff. Fisher noted that the Conservation Commission had denied the MBTA request for permits on two bases: first, because of the impacts on wetlands, the train project can't meet the Wetlands Protection Act; second, there was a lack of adequate information on which to make judgements.

Fisher indicated that they need to know the right information about the project and its impacts so that the Commission would know what to require of the MBTA. He told DEP staff: "we don't know what the project will be since the T is proceeding on a design/build basis — we don't know how to assure proper mitigation unless we receive additional information." He asked that the DEP reschedule the site visit for another day, so that representatives of the Conservation Commission could participate.

DEP representatives agreed to reschedule their site visit. They said "no-one can deny that there will be adverse impacts — there is absolutely no way this project can come into compliance with regulations." They pointed out that the MBTA knows what the right of way will be, how much bordering vegetated wetland will be affected, and that they were now undertaking an effort to identify, quantify and certify vernal pools. The T has to collect these materials, and identify the 100-foot radius area, and total square foot impact of the project.

DEP staff acknowledged that the "vernal pool thing is not completely defined." They also pointed out that there cannot be vernal pool mitigation allowed unless the MBTA gets a variance approved at the DEP Commissioner's level. Nonetheless, the staff described the variance process which the T is aiming towards.

DEP staff will come back and walk the tracks with the Conservation Commission, and observe the vernal pools which are the habitats for endangered species, and listen to concerns about vernal pools, filling of wetlands, and any stream crossings, and turn down the application of the MBTA to build the train because it doesn't meet the wetlands standards of the Commonwealth. Then the whole matter will go to the DEP Commissioner, who could grant a variance. If one is granted, then this could be challenged in court.

This is complex, but it is central to just one element of Greenbush — the natural environment. Greenbush isn't "over." In fact, the real inquiry is just underway. For citizens concerned about these complex environmental issues, the DEP will reschedule a site visit along the right of way with Hingham's Conservation Commission at a time to be determined (check with the office at 781-741-1445), and with Cohasset's Conservation Commission on April 23 at 10:30 a.m.. Scituate's site visit has yet to be scheduled.

Frivolity rules court calendar

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Really, I couldn't believe this when I read it last week. Nicolas Perruche, a French teenager who was born deaf, partially blind and brain-damaged, sued his unnamed prenatal doctor for allowing him to be born.

Seems the doctor who examined his pregnant mother found that she had been exposed to rubella but advised her that it was safe to give birth anyway.

Ergo, the suit.

It seemed like just another frivolous legal exercise designed to extract a few francs (or euros) from a doctor in an out-of-court settlement — until the court found for the kid!

I'm not sure what Nicky — or more likely, his family and their lawyers — expected the doctor to do since I think abortion may still be illegal in France and then there's that oft-forgotten thing called the Hippocratic oath.

Anyhow, the whole thing has sparked a furor in France with the legal system pitted against the médics, whose malpractice insurance rates have soared, and the parents of disabled children, who feel that the decision casts doubt on the value of their offspring.

Don't laugh — which, when you think about it, is a heck of a thing for me to say — the same thing is happening on a lesser scale right here in the United States where the courts have been making law for the past 50 or more years.

Just the other day, Harvey Taylor, a convicted sex offender AWOL from Florida, escaped custody and fled into the Maine woods where he spent three subfreezing nights and lost a couple of toes to frostbite.

The classic case of a frivolous law suit that prevailed in court was won by the woman who spilled hot coffee on her person and sued McDonald's.

Of course, he threatened to sue. "If the detective had done his job, I wouldn't be in here now," he told the Bangor Daily News from his bed in St. Joseph Hospital. I don't know how that turned out.

Sherwood 48 Associates, owners of a building at 2 Times Square in Manhattan, are suing Columbia Pictures, makers of the movie "Spider-Man," for digitally removing a Samsung sign from the building which is shown in the flick.

Sony, a Samsung competitor, owns Columbia Pictures. The federal court has yet to rule. "We think it's inappropriate to substitute your own image for the one that exists," said Anthony Constantini, the lawyer for Sherwood 48.

Vili Pualaau, the 16-year-old schoolboy who impregnated his teacher, Mary Kay Letourneau, not once but twice, starting when he was 13, is suing the city of Des Moines, Wash., and its school district for $1 million.

City police, he claimed, failed to protect him from Letourneau, who was 38 at the time, because they failed to notify his mother when they found the pair together in flagrante delecto in a sleeping bag in the back of a van at a local marina.

The Italian American Defense Association filed suit in Illinois for a declaratory judgment condemning the HBO show about a fictional Mafia family, "The Sopranos," because it was in violation of a clause in the state constitution guaranteeing individual dignity.

The classic case of a frivolous law suit that prevailed in court was the millions — later reduced to thousands — won by the woman who spilled hot coffee on her person and sued McDonald's for scalding her.

Well, a quick as you could say, "Get me a lawyer!" no less than 36 people filed similar suits in England only to come up against Justice Richard Field, who injected a little common sense into the picture. He threw the case out of court.

If they didn't know hot coffee would scald them, Field ruled in effect, McDonald's had no obligation to warn them. Besides, if their coffee wasn't hot, they'd probably send it back anyway. So there!

Trooper exam is May 10

Applications post-marked after May 10 will not be accepted. To qualify, a person must be at least 19 years old and less than 35 years old as of May 10, 2002. Applications may be obtained by contacting Bradley, at 617-722-2120. Additionally applications are available on the internet and may be accessed at http://www.state.ma.us/hrd/

Can you help with post-prom party?

The Post Prom Decorating Committee is well underway and is very excited about this year's event that will have a great theme. The committee is are looking for more people to help with some of the projects and is also looking for a few items to borrow on June 1 for example, oriental rugs, ornate chandeliers, and a large counter for stools. Please do not offer anything valuable. If you can help in any way, please call Mary Sullivan at 383-6666.

Public input sought on sidewalks, lights

the site and drop it into the ballot box.

Rizzo said CRC will take the results of the survey into strong consideration when making its recommendations to selectmen.

"It's an important part of the development process," he said. "They'll weigh heavily in the decision process." Rizzo hopes at least a few hundred residents fill out the form. Currently, the project is moving from the conceptual design stages, which CRC has developed, to realizing the project, which will be in the hands of the town. The town will hire an engineering firm to complete the drawings and put the project out to bid.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the Request for Proposals have already been sent out and are due back next Thursday. Haddad and Town Planner Liz Harrington will sort through the dozens of proposals and narrow the field down to about three for the selectmen to choose from.

"We hope to hire a firm sometime in May," Haddad said.

The six sidewalk designs, ranging from all brick to completely concrete, don't differ that much in price. Brick and concrete would cost about $1.86 million and $1.73 million, respectively.

"We don't want the town to make its decision on price," Rizzo said. "We want it to be based on what makes the town most aesthetically pleasing."

The estimated $2 million total construction cost for village revitalization includes roadway reconstruction/rehabilitation, upgraded intersections, curbing, drainage, decorative lighting, streetscape features, plantings signage, and other amenities. A combination of state grant money and help from the MBTA which will reconstruct the town parking lot and Ripley Road/Depot Court intersection as part of the train project should cover the cost.

Rizzo said it's important the town revamp the downtown area. He said compared to other towns, Cohasset's sidewalks and roads are in a state of disrepair.

"There's a basic need to provide a safer environment for pedestrians," he said. Rizzo said creating a better environment in the village would also bring more local residents to the businesses on South Main Street.

"The village will never be a tourist haven because it's too small," he said. "But it will be a really nice place for residents."

The project should be completed in about five years. The town is expected to hire a consulting firm to finish the construction documents, which should be finished by September. Rizzo anticipates construction beginning in 2003 in conjunction with the restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail Service and the final phase of the James Brook Flood Control Project.

The current regulation stipulates if a company sells tobacco to minors twice in the span of two years, the board has the option to fine the store or ban it from selling tobacco products for about seven days. However, the new regulations will state if a store sells to a minor twice in one year the board's only option will be to suspend its license.

While Dr. Joe Godzik, Cohasset's health agent, thinks the tougher regulations are fair, he said he doesn't believe it will have much effect on the town.

"In my time I've never seen a company in town sell to a minor twice in two years, let alone one," he said. "The merchants in this town are pretty good about it."

Most smokers start young and with tobacco companies routinely targeting teenagers, stopping the sale to minors takes precedence.

However, even those in Cohasset who are old enough to purchase cigarettes may have a hard time finding a place to smoke. Cohasset has joined many other South Shore communities in banning smoking in public places.

Currently, the town's restaurants are 100 percent smoke-free meaning no area is designated as a "smoking" section. The Board of Health has issued a total of three variances, all for a five-year period and all to bar areas, in Atlantica, The Red Lion Inn and KoKo Island.

According to Godzik, those establishments must have a separate ventilation system for their bars and negative pressure there so any air flows into the bar area and not the other way around. Installing these systems can cost upwards of $50,000.

Smoking is also prohibited in all municipal buildings and vehicles. The town restricts smoking in private work sites unless there is a private office where the public does not enter. Businesses are allowed to have a smoking lounge, but if they do, must provide a lounge of the same size for non-smokers.

Cohasset joins several towns in area who have come together to restrict smoking.

Jim Wells, the director of the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative Tobacco Control Program, said the issue is not the people smoking, it's the cigarettes.

"This is not a fight against smokers," he said. "This is a fight against the smoke."

Wells said second-hand smoke, the fumes emitted when a person exhales as well as the smoke billowing from the cigarette, can be every bit as dangerous as inhaling it directly.

"By banning smoking in public places we're trying to protect those who choose not to smoke," he said.

So far 14 towns in the collaborative have adopted the regulations. Of those, Weymouth, Braintree and Plymouth are totally smoke free while others, such as Cohasset and Hingham allow variances with strict standards.

"We're trying to make sure those who don't smoke aren't put in a unhealthy situation," Godzik said.

One of the requirements for the bars in Cohasset that are permitted to entertain smokers, is that the number of seats in the bar area can't exceed 25 percent of the seats in the establishment.

"The dangers of smoking and second-hand smoke are incredible," Godzik said. "From lung cancer to heart disease they really run the gamut."

Robin Lawrence, a member of the Board of Health, said another issue is protecting workers while they are on the job.

"We thought it was generally a good idea to try and limit the amount of places in town where people could smoke," he said. "This will help the general health of the town."

Godzik said a provision of the variance which allows smoking in the three bars in town is if a worker, either a bartender or waiter, is assigned to the smoking area, they are not required to work there.

"An employee can not get fired for refusing to work in a smoke filled environment," he said.

Cohasset adopted this practice in 1999 when voters at Town Meeting approved the bylaw. Godzik said while there wasn't a general outcry for the article, the board felt it needed to protect people as much as possible.

"The reason we allowed for variances is because some of the bars in town assured us that they could provide a safe environment for smokers," he said.

The five-year licenses, which are set to expire in 2004, will be reviewed by the board thoroughly before they reissue them. Godzik said the board took into account the pleas of restaurants that were concerned they may lose revenue if their customers were unable to light up.

While health is the primary concern when dealing with smoking issues, the monetary effects on our country is also a source of worry. A recently published report by the Center for Disease Control stated that every pack of cigarettes sold in the U.S. costs the nation $7 in medical care.

The CDC estimated that the nation's smoking-related medical costs at $3.45 per pack and said job productivity lost because of premature death from smoking was about $3.73 per pack, a total of $7.18.

The study by revealed that the nation's total expenditures on smoking is about $157.7 billion, or more than $3,000 for every smoker.

Judge sets trial date for runway

Opponents of the expansion of Boston's Logan International Airport have succeeded in obtaining an expedited trial date for their lawsuit against the Massachusetts Port Authority. At a conference April 11, Plymouth Superior Court Justice Charles Hely set the trial for Oct. 7, according to attorney William B. Golden, who filed the suit on behalf of the Town of Hull.

The suit, filed in September 2001, seeks to stop the construction of Runway 14/32 at Logan and also challenges Massport's management of the airport. Golden, of the of the law firm of Baker, Braverman and Barbadoro, P.C. of Braintree, contends that the proposed runway is too costly and is unnecessary, and that Logan's current operations create a noise nuisance and pollution problems for communities under the airport's flight path.

The suit seeks to stop the construction of Runway 14/32 and also challenges Massport's management of the airport.

"We're extremely pleased that we will be going to trial in six months," Golden said. "Massport has never before been put under this kind of scrutiny."

Cohasset's car love affair is taxing age for that year of the manufacturer's suggested retail price. For example a four-year-old car would be assessed at 25 percent of its value. So the owner of a four-year-old car that was listed for $15,000 when new, would pay $150 in excise taxes to the town. ($15,000x40 percent = $6,000 x.025=$150). If the excise tax hike were to pass, that same vehicle owner would pay $180.

The registry provides the billing information to cities and towns, although it doesn't set the rates and uses none of the money for its own budget.

Luigi Masciarelli, president of Majestic Cars on Route 3A, says high-end cars have very likely driven up the excise tax collections in Cohasset and surrounding towns.

Majestic sells used Mercedes, Jaguars, BMWs and Porsches for anywhere from about $25,000 and up. Masciarelli said the recession has not affected the market for expensive cars and he noted that sales of SUVs continue to be strong despite worries about gas prices.

"I tell people all the time, I sell what you want not what you need," he says.

People looking just for transportation are likely to buy a domestic car and spend about $25,000 on average, Masciarelli says.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, says the House will debate the excise tax hike proposal later this month.

He would look at supporting it only if there was a local option — meaning towns could take it to their individual Town Meetings for approval. Bradley would not support a mandated excise tax hike.

"I would consider it only if it contained the local option," adding it could give towns a tool to cope with the recession.

But Bradley also sees how excise taxes can be a hot issue.

After just paying the sales tax on a new car, he received a bill for the excise tax.

"I thought, 'I'm paying tax on a vehicle I already bought,'" he says.

But state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, says an increase in the excise tax would most certainly be vetoed by the governor and there would not be enough votes in the Legislature to override it. He said there aren't enough legislators with the stomach for a tax increase.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said while the increased revenue would be nice, he is opposed to an excise tax hike because Cohasset taxpayers are facing higher taxes with the expected delay in school building assistance monies from the state.

Cohasset isn't alone with high excise tax collections. Scituate and Hingham, although both nearly three times the population of Cohasset, collected $2 million and $2.7 million respectively in the last fiscal year. Norwell, another affluent town which is about one-third bigger than Cohasset, collected $1.7 million.

Helping everyone to become part of the community

Group provides services to those with disabilities

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

The family-oriented South Shore Association for Retarded Citizens (ARC) has been helping individuals faced with developmental challenges find their niche in the community for more than 50 years.

The community-based organization serves more than 1,000 families of individuals of all ages faced with developmental disabilities and mental retardation, including Hingham, Cohasset, Weymouth, Braintree, Norwell, and Scituate.

"It makes for a better world for individuals living with those disabilities, their families, friends, neighbors and society in general for them to live in a community and to be as productive as they possibly can," said Director of Development George Mathieson. "They have the same right to that as everyone else. We're here to help them reach those goals."

South Shore ARC staff, board of directors and volunteers hail from a number of communities.

For the Snows of Pioneer Road in Hingham, it's a family commitment.

Ellie, 4, who has Down's Syndrome, is the reason behind their involvement.

Before the family moved to Hingham from Chicago, Ellie was involved in an ARC intervention program there, so it was only natural to hook up with the South Shore branch of the organization.

"Our first activity was Bay Day at Glastonbury Abbey, which is a great annual family event," said Kathleen Snow, who was recently appointed to the South Shore ARC board of directors. "We really felt welcome."

Ellie and her three sisters, Emily, Erin and Lilly, attend South School together. Ellie is involved in the integrated preschool program there, which blends regular-day students with special needs children.

Snow is looking forward to further participation in ARC activities in her new role.

"I wanted to contribute something for Ellie, just as I'm involved with my other daughters' activities at South School," Snow said. "ARC will continue to be an integral part of Ellie's life, and I wanted to give back something to the program that has served her so well."

The entire family is committed to social services, according to Snow, including her husband, Stephen, who is involved with not-for-profit work in his public accounting profession.

Ellie's sisters have served as volunteers for the ARC Special Olympics as well and thoroughly enjoy their involvement.

"I just think it's one of those clichés where you say when you have a special needs child, you don't realize the gifts you will receive, which has proved to be the case," Snow said.

"We're involved in a whole community of people who are very special."

Also serving on the board of directors are Betty Belyea, Richard Frye and Shyla Settles of Braintree; Jean Bailey, Norma Grassey and Maria Plante of Cohasset; Robert Gramm and James Lawson of Norwell and other South Shore residents. Dorothy Lang of Weymouth serves as South Shore ARC president.

The South Shore ARC was founded by parents who "thought there was a better way," according to Mathieson. "A number of them still have a finger in the pie after all those years. It's a real grassroots local organization."

Headquartered in North Weymouth, South Shore ARC offers a wide variety of services to different age groups, from early intervention to assistance for senior citizens, ranging from recreational activities and residential support to providing personal attendant services and employment assistance.

The majority of individuals served by the community service department, which provides recreational opportunities and personal care attendant and support services, live at home with their families or by themselves.

Recreational opportunities include the Special Olympics as well as a dinner club, vacations, respite and campaign trips.

ARC's early intervention program responds to the need for a family-centered approach to fostering the development of children from birth to three years who are at risk due to environmental or biological factors.

"We're very well-known in the community of people with developmental disabilities, their families, advocates and others who are involved," Mathieson said.

An individual is considered to have mental retardation if his or her IQ is below 70-75; significant limitations exist in two or more adaptive skill areas; and the condition exists from childhood (age 18 or less).

Adaptive skill areas are daily living skills needed to live, work and play in the community, including communication, self-care, home living, social skills, health and safety and functional academics in reading, writing and basic math.

The effects of mental retardation vary from individuals who are slower than average in learning new information and skills to those with serious functioning limitations.

With early intervention, though, along with education and appropriate supports in adulthood, even those with severe limitations can learn how to lead satisfying lives in their communities.

Snow considers the wide variety of services offered by ARC "necessary and a tremendous help in making individuals all they can be."

Early intervention was critical in providing a foundation for Ellie for pre-school and learning in general.

"You can never start too early, just like with regular kids who learn to read and are introduced to different experiences from the beginning," Snow said. "The same is true with special needs children, but they need to be assisted by individuals who can best serve them."

A number of local residents were recognized for their service at South Shore ARC's recent 51st Annual Dinner Dance, including staff member and Hingham resident Gerry Peak and Joanne Johnson of Scituate for 10 years of service; Fallon Ambulance Service and the New Nursery of Norwell for exemplary service; Ernie Grassey of Cohasset as Volunteer of the Year; Jon Gardner of Weymouth for 20 years of service; and Paul Damigella and Sharon Dubois of Weymouth for 15 years of service.

South Shore ARC is a membership-based organization.

The membership elects the board of directors who in turn elects the president and other officers. The executive director reports to the board of directors.

The non-profit organization is funded in a number of ways — 50 percent of its revenue comes from government programs; one-third from insurance reimbursement; 11 percent from fund raising; and approximately $100,000 annually from the United Way.

"About 90 percent of all the funds that South Shore ARC receives go into front-line services that affect and improve the lives of individuals and families with developmental disabilities," Mathieson said.

Year-round volunteer opportunities are available in residential, day habilitation and recreational activities, which include a gym program at Thayer Academy and another in Norwell, which are open to anyone in the community.

The day habilitation program places an emphasis on daily living skills, community participation and therapeutic supports.

Staffed residential homes and apartments are located in Hingham, Weymouth, Braintree, Scituate, Randolph and Quincy.

For further information about South Shore ARC, call 781-335-3023 or visit www.southshorearc.com.

South Shore ARC's next fund-raising event, the 15th Annual Lou Bailey Golf Tournament, will take place Tues., June 25, at Lakeville Country Club. Contact George Mathieson at (781) 335-3023, ext. 120, for more information.

South Shore ARC also conducts an annual appeal for donations, a memorial program, United Way activities and a monthly newsletter.

There are signed pictures of Joe Montana and Bobby Hull, Cassius Clay and Mother Teresa gracing the walls. There are also baseballs autographed by Ronald Reagan, George Bush, and Jimmy Carter. And then, there's a picture of Matthew.

Matthew's father, Ernie Grassey, a certified public accountant and avid collector of sports memorabilia, sits in his Scituate Harbor office, surrounded by the photos and piles of books and files that indicate this is tax-filing season.

He's a friendly man, who loves to talk, and is as proud as any dad could be about a son.

But what sets Matthew, 25, apart — and created special challenges for his parents — is autism.

"When people are afflicted by autism, their idiosyncrasies occupy their life," Grassey said. "They live in a world of their own."

"It helped us to get in touch with people who are in the same situation."
— Ernie Grassey, ARC volunteer of the year

Grassey, who was recently named the South Shore Association of Retarded Citizens volunteer of the year, works on the finance committee of the association and donates as much time as possible to the cause. South Shore ARC offers a wide variety of services to different age groups, from early intervention to assistance for senior citizens, ranging from recreational activities and residential support to providing personal attendant services and employment assistance.

George Mathieson, program director for ARC, said Grassey received the award because he is involved in every facet of the organization.

"He donates to every event and activity that we have," Mathieson said. "His commitment is year long, year after year."

Grassey said getting involved with the organization has made he and his wife Norma realize they were not alone.

"It helped us to get in touch with people who are in the same situation," he said. "It gave us a national friendship group."

The Grasseys discovered their son was autistic when he was three-years-old. Being unfamiliar with the developmental disability, Grassey went to a book store and bought every book he could find with "autism" in the title.

"It's one of those things you know a little about but really don't have a clue," he said.

After dealing with the illness for 22 years, Grassey knows a substantial amount now.

Autism is a neurological disorder that affects the functioning of the brain and makes it hard for those individuals to communicate with others and relate to the outside world. It is not life-threatening or life-shortening and affects males more than females in a four to one ratio.

"It's a very trusting, simplistic life," Grassey said.

Grassey admitted it was tough raising a child with a debilitating disability. Matthew, who now lives in a group home, needs constant attention.

Ernie Grassey, who received volunteer of the year honors from South Shore ARC, in his Scituate Harbor office.

"It's tough to know that he'll never be married or really have a job," he said. "But it's something that we now accept.

"But Matthew can get so involved with an activity that nothing else matters," Grassey said. "I'm jealous of that in a certain kind of way."

Grassey, who has been involved with the ARC for more than 20 years, said having a child with autism keeps him grounded. He said no matter how fantastic your day was or how much money you make, you come home to find your son ripping off his shirt in a fit of anger.

"It stops you from getting too carried away with silly stuff," he said. "It really teaches you what's important."

Grassey has come to terms with his son's disease and enjoys every moment he gets to spend with him.

"If I'm going to get a 25-year-old a Sesame Street toy because that's what he wants, that's okay, because that's who Matthew is," he said.

"We started this tradition nine years ago to recognize those who make the town we love a better place," said Mariner editor Mary Ford. "Glenn's generosity of spirit and goodwill led us to select him for this year's honor."

At the ceremony Pratt was presented with a framed, mock front page of the Cohasset Mariner heralding his selection as Citizen of the Year along with a plaque from Community Newspaper Company, the parent company of the Cohasset Mariner. CNC/South editor in chief Mark Skala was on hand to make the presentations.

"It's great to honor this man as he has honored our community."
— Selectman Fred Koed

Both state Sen. Robert Hedlund and state Rep. Garrett Bradley presented Pratt with proclamations from the Senate and House, respectively.

"This is a well deserved award for a man who worked very hard for many years in this town," said Selectman Fred Koed, who presented Pratt with a resolution from the town. "It's great to honor this man as he has honored our community."

Wayne Sawchuk, a friend of Pratt's for 45 years, thanked him for all the work he's done around town. After telling some humorous tales of Pratt's youth, Sawchuk said he was glad to see him join a special group of those who have been named Citizen of the Year.

Pratt's sister Sheralyn Craig and his friend Michael Bleakie also shared some anecdotes with the guests.

Pratt joins prior year citizens including the late Gerard Keating, Joe Buckley, the Rev. Gary Ritts, Dr. Robert Sceery, Anna Abbruzzese, Katherine Stanton, the late Clark Chatterton and Mary Jeanette Murray.

Pratt, who was quite humbled at the honor, said there were many others who contributed to all he's been involved with.

"It took a lot of people believing in my ideas to bring them to fruition," he said. "Everyone who has worked with me has been great."

He added that he really appreciated the recognition he has received.

"I try to instill enthusiasm to those I work with," he said.

Pratt was chosen from a list of seven nominees submitted by 27 individuals, families or groups by a selection committee consisting of Ford, Town Manager Mark Haddad, Jennifer Piepenbrink, 622 CJC Highway, and Osborne Ingram, 274 Beechwood St.

Men-only breakfast club celebrates 14th birthday

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Win Merrill just wanted to get seniors out of their houses. He had no idea that 14 years later he'd still be taking them to breakfast.

Merrill, 86, is the founder of Chanticleers, a breakfast club group for older men. The group is currently celebrating its 14 birthday.

The idea from the group came about when Merrill visited the Senior Center and found the center provided plenty of opportunities for women to get together outside the center, but few for men. He added when many men retire they no longer see there business friends which can leave them isolated.

"We're all best friends and have an incredible time together."
— Win Merrill, 73 Lantern Lane

"My idea was to take them into the country for conversation and breakfast," Merrill said. "This is just something I thought I could offer."

John Coe, a member of the Council on Elder Affairs, said he thinks it's wonderful Merrill has created this group for senior men. He said the council has had trouble in the past recruiting men for its activities.

"The only thing I have against it is the convene too late for me," Coe joked.

The group started with Merrill taking the two or so seniors who wanted to participate in his car to various restaurants around the South Shore. Pretty soon, word spread and now the breakfasts include up to 40 men from the all over the South Shore. It takes plenty of cars to transport all the members, the oldest of whom is 91 and the youngest is 60, to the restaurant now.

Fruit the Clown (Susan Oberg Jacobvitz) snuggles with Ernie Lentini at the 14th anniversary party for the Chanticleers (Men's Breakfast Club) at the Red Parrot in Hull.

"We used to be able to just pick up and go anywhere," Merrill said. "Now we have to find places that can accommodate all of us."

Merrill said the time spent with his peers every Wednesday morning is something he looks forward to as soon as the week begins.

"It's the best time of my life," he said. "We're all best friends and have an incredible time together."The Chanticleers, which is French for rooster, has no specific structure according to Merrill. He said its motto of "no rules, no news" guides the club.

"Anyone that wants to tag along is more than welcome," he said.

Merrill added the only condition placed upon members is that they participate in the morning feasts. He said if they miss too many, they are politely asked to leave.

Murray Campbell, 75 Old Pasture Road, has been involved with the group for more than 10 years and still enjoys visiting with his friends every Wednesday.

"I enjoy talking and telling jokes," he said. "It's a great time."

Campbell added that it's wonderful to sit down with people who have led interesting and productive lives and listening to what they have to say.

"It's all about good fellowship," he said. "This is a really nice group of guys."

Merrill said it's no trouble running the group, it basically governs itself. He said if someone needs a ride they can call anyone on the list and more times than not, he'll oblige.

"It's really easy when you have a group of guys like this," Merrill said. "It's a pleasure to run."

Mike Dooley and John Andrade

These two Cohasset High baseball players sparked the offense in a 15-10 win over South Shore Vocational on Tuesday that got the Skippers back to within a win of .500 (2-3).. Dooley went 3-for-5 with 3 RBIs and John Andrade finished 2-for-2 with a pair knocked in.

Growing pains

Young baseball team struggles in early going

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Guess what high school baseball coaches can do?

They can rotate one pitcher in and out repeatedly in a game.

So, guess what one of the big differences was in Thursday's 9-1 loss for the Cohasset boys baseball team?

"Three times we put ourselves in good position to score, and three times the Norton coach came in with his ace to shut us down," reported coach Bob Knurek. "That's good coaching. We went from seeing a junk balling left to a fireballing righty and he just shut us down."

The rule is that a coach can make these repeated moves on his first trip to the mound every inning, so three times Norton coach Dave Mollica did so, letting his ace finish up innings that started badly and then putting him back in to the field to start the next.

"With a few non-league games coming up, (the Norton coach) was willing to risk tiring him out a little," continued Knurek, following the loss that dropped his team to 0-3 in South Shore League play (1-3 overall). "League wins are obviously more important. He makes good use of that rule. He's done it to us before."

Compounding their difficulties, the Skippers ran themselves out of a few potential rallies.

"That's what happens with a young team sometimes," appraised Knurek. "I have quite a few younger players in the lineup, even a few freshman, so mistakes like that aren't all that surprising. It's part of the learning curve."

So, despite the lopsided score, Knurek was not displeased with the outing. His Skippers scattered seven hits for the day, along with drawing a few walks — a pretty good output in his mind.

"It really wasn't as bad as it looked," insisted the veteran coach. "They hit the ball well, and we hit the ball pretty well. A big part of the difference, I think was our inexperience, and our lack of timely hitting. The good news, though, is we've got some younger players who are getting some good experience."

Skippers 15, South Shore VoTech 10

Cohasset was able to move back within a game of that all-important .500 mark (at 2-3) with a big 15-10 win over South Shore Vocational on Wednesday.

Tim Straughn earned the win with three strong innings on the mound before Knurek looked to get a couple of his younger hurlers some experience.

The Skippers offensive assault was led by Mike Dooley (3-for-5, 3 RBIs) and John Andrade (2-for-2, 2 RBIs).

Next on tap

South Shore League action resumes on Tuesday with a road game against first place Abington (5-0).

"Hopefully, we can start to put a few things together," said Knurek. "I've seen signs. All we can do is keep working at it, but these league games are big for us."

Laxers fall in last minute thriller

Libby and Moore lead offense in tough loss to Falmouth, 11-10

A tight back-and-forth battle between two long-time Pilgrim Conference rivals ended with visiting Falmouth on top, 11-10, and Cohasset suffering its first loss of the 2002 season.

The game, played under the lights at Alumni Field on Friday night, saw the game tied at the end of the first quarter, at the half, and with four minutes to play. But a Falmouth score with a little over two minutes remaining gave the visiting Clippers a lead they were able to protect, as the Skippers never regained possession.

"This was the kind of contest we expect when we play Falmouth," said head coach Kevin Orcutt. "They're athletic and extremely well-coached. They had a terrific long-stick midfielder who helped them dominate face-offs, and a great offensive player in Jason Cleary. We played well, but didn't do quite enough to win."

The Skippers made a run in the fourth quarter after falling behind, 10-8. Senior Eric Libby, who would finish the game with a goal and six assists, twice in the space of 45 seconds found classmate Jason Moore (three goals, two assists) open on the crease to tie the game at 10-10. But Cohasset would never again regain possession – a problem all evening as the Skippers won only two of 20 face-offs – and Falmouth scored the game-winner on an isolation play by middie Mike Balbuena with two-and-a-half minutes to go.

Senior goalie Kyle Weber would finish with 15 saves, 10 in the first half. His Falmouth counterpart had 21 saves on the night.

"Defensively, I have to give senior Chris Caron and junior Ben Lynner a lot of credit," said Orcutt. "Both are first-year players for us, and both stepped up to this competition, the best we've faced this year. But we hurt ourselves badly in not winning more face-offs, and in losing too many ground ball battles. Games like this are won and lost on those aspects of the game, and if we want to play with the big boys, we're going to have to improve in those areas."

Besides Moore and Libby, other Skipper scorers were senior Paul Previte with a hat trick, and juniors Curt Kahn, Matt Davis and Tom Anderson with a goal apiece.

"We're missing several players during vacation week, which isn't

Softball on the upswing

Cohasset girls surprise with pair of decisive wins

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

There's no question about it: Cohasset High will have a varsity softball team in the South Shore League next year.

Cohasset has been without a varsity team for nearly eight years or since lacrosse was introduced to the school's sports program, cutting into the softball numbers significantly.

However, since coach Deb Bostwick took over the program, Cohasset softball has been on the upswing.

Playing junior varsity ball this season, Cohasset has 13 players on the team and a feeder system at the Middle School with 23 players in the program.

"I was hoping to win at least two games early in the season to build up confidence for the kids and we already achieved that," noted the coach.

In fact, Cohasset started the season with a 20-2 victory over the Norwell JVers. Cohasset players had a total of 50 at bats in that game, collecting 20 hits to go along with the 20 runs.

Win number two came in the team's second outing, again in decisive fashion, with a 15-3 decision over Mashpee. Cohasset had 46 at bats in that game, collecting a total of 13 hits.

To go along with the strong hitting, Cohasset's defense was also

Youth laxers sweep home openers

The Cohasset Youth Lacrosse boys teams played their first home games of 2002 and continued the dominance they showed early in the season on the road, sweeping all five contests at Milliken Field on April 14.

It was the second straight weekend with a sweep for the boys teams. The day marked the first time the youth program used two fields simultaneously at Milliken, testimony to the growth of sport at a youth level over the last seven years.

At the 10-and-Under (10-U, grades three and four) level, Cohasset Blue opened with a 13-4 win over Hanover.

The game was close in the first quarter, with Cohasset taking a lead and Hanover mounting a comeback to close to 4-2 by the end of the period. But Cohasset dominated the second period and the rest of the game.

Max Shipp powered the team with five goals, while Dean Drisçoll contributed a hat trick and Justin Yeager added two goals and two assists. Will Wise contributed two goals, Chris Brown had a goal and an assist and Chase Murphy and Brendan Horrigan added assists as Cohasset controlled play in its offensive zone.

The defense — shorthanded due to vacation — was led by Mark Dick, Alex Kinnealey, Nick Lieberman, Will Lynner. Chris Brown and Jack Murphy split the goaltending chores, and fended off any Hanover hopes for a rally.

The Cohasset White 10-U squad followed with a 17-1 demolition of Weymouth, in a performance that was particularly impressive because 12 different players got involved in the scoring.

Cohasset jumped out to an early lead in this one and never looked back. Chris Walsh led the way with 3 goals and one assist, while Enrico Terruzzi, John Kearney, Eamon Davis and Andrew Graham each contributed two goals. Oliver Forrer, Luke Ernst, Will Wise, David Hernon, Patrick Cantillon and Ian Quinlan talied single goals, with Cantillon and Jake Wheelwright adding assists.

Terrence Durkin, Keegan Flynn and Thomas Pecca led a shorthanded defensive squad. Ian Quinlan and Jack Murphy split the goaltending chores and helped make the score so lopsided.

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

Ah, springtime: when a young sports fanatic's fancy turns to baseball.

And what could be better. It's finally starting to actually feel like spring and the Sox are looking strong.

Nomar, Pedro and 'Tek made it through Spring Training without incident. The rotation should be improved. Hermanson and Burkett aren't great, but, once healthy, should provide the team enough game-in and game-out to give the offense the opportunity to win it. I'm looking for big things from Derek Lowe and, before too long, Juan Pena (mark my words). Plus, the Curse of the Yawkee Trust is over!

Damon, Henderson, Nomar, Manny, Tony Clark, Trot, Shea, 'Tek and Rey Sanchez...wow! Speaking objectively (really), I'd put the potential of that batting order up against any other MLB team's. We've got speed at the top of the order for the first time since we pulled Otis Nixon off the waiver wire trash heap. And it's also almost been that long since we've had a second baseman like Sanchez who can turn anything other than the "routine double play".

Nomar, Manny, Tony the ex-Tiger and Trot in the middle of the order...let me reiterate (assuming health issues aren't a concern)...Wow!

Obviously, all of this gets a father of young baseball fans to thinking how great it'd be to take in a game at Fenway.

I'll do it just like I did last year. Let's see now...B-o-s-t-o-n-R-e-d-s-o-x-.-c-o-m.... "ticket sales" (click) ... "bleachers" (click).....SCREECH!

"THEY WANT HOW MUCH FOR A TICKET THIS YEAR??!?!"

Well, at least NESN is free now.

Of course, there's nothing like spending the day at the ballpark, the smell of the freshly cut grass intermingling with boiling hot dogs and melting candy, the excitement and, most of all, this wonderful game being played by finely honed and committed athletes. Could anything possibly be better than enjoying all of this with your kids?

Unfortunately, the Sox have priced out this father of four.

FORTUNATELY, high school baseball season is now in full swing, and several of our area teams are shaping up into pretty compelling stories. And best of all, it's all free: parking AND (in most cases) admission. Second best of all, the drives are a lot shorter. Of course, with gas prices these days, some might say it's a pretty close second.

Let's start with the Scituate baseball team that exploded into prominence last season, finishing with an 17-3 record. The Sailors return six regulars to this year's team, including their two most valuable players from last year's squad in Jesse Cole (pitcher/infield) and Jason Connelly (pitcher/shortstop). All Cole did in his junior year was lead the Patriot League in both hitting (.500) and ERA (an eye-popping 0.84 mark), making him a no-brainer for league MVP honors, and he also just happened to have received and accepted a full baseball scholarship to Wofford College. Connelly, meanwhile, chipped in with a none-too-shabby 2.62 ERA as the number two starter, while hitting .427, leading the team in RBI (23) and arguably playing the league's best shortstop.

Norwell also returns its top two players in Bobby Savoy (pitcher/shortstop) and Jason Kustka (centerfield) —both South Shore League all-stars — along with most of the rest of the crew that qualified for the state tourney last year. The team's biggest loss on the bench was 33-year coach Al Kassatly, who retired last spring with nearly 475 career coaching victories. Former Scituate JV coach Tom Jacobs will fill "Big Al's" sizeable cleats, but the transition should be eased with Savoy and John Conlan returning to provide the 1-2 punch from the mound and a solid batting order top to bottom.

Then there's the "Little High School that could," Cohasset.

Drawing from a student population that just barely climbed above 300 this year, CHS male squads have somehow been able to not only survive but thrive over the last year — with lacrosse, track, football soccer, hockey and wrestling teams all finishing first or second in league play. The baseball team, under veteran coach Bob Knurek, is looking to take its own spot on the school's wall of fame this spring (or, in this case, the bulletin board outside AD Ron Ford's office). The Skippers already know they will be without senior standout Nick Bolster (who suffered a detached retina approximately 11 months ago and has been unable to take part in any athletic competition since), but most of the rest of the core returns, including star Tim Straughn, the team's top hitter and number one pitcher/catcher from last year. South Shore League hockey fans will no doubt remember Straughn, one of the SSL's most dominant defensemen this winter, and probably be shocked to hear that baseball is actually the sport in which he is drawing the most interest from college recruiters.

At Silver Lake, Steve Giambanco takes over a team from longtime coach Bob Rodgers (of NESN fame) who finished one win shy of .500 and post-season qualification last spring. The Lakers will be led at the plate and on the mound by returning main men Rob McLean (team's 2001 MVP) and Griff Benelli. The team graduated 13 seniors, but appears ready to ride several key members from last year's excellent JV squad, including slick fielding shortstop Ryan Nicotri and hurler Nick Bohtelo.

There are several other Marinerland teams which should be in the thick of the post-season hunt. Both Marshfield (4-0) and Abington (5-0)return the bulk of their talent from last season and are hungry after missing out on the state tourney last season, as witnessed by their perfect starts. Hanover (10-10 last season), Hingham (12-8) and Rockland (11-9) also return several key players and are looking toward a further advance in the post-season in 2002.

So there you go folks. Hopefully, this will be enough to whet a few appetites for some of the quality baseball that's taking place right there in our local ball parks.

As I've typed for this space a few times previous, and will no doubt type a few times more: there's nothing that compares with being at a baseball game.

A football game is unparalleled in scope on the sporting event scale, while, for non-stop intensity, basketball and hockey, are (at least in my mind) unmatched.

That said, there's nothing in the sports spectatorship realm that compares with being at a baseball game.

Why? Well, obviously you've got the way the game has been so widely romanticized by our culture. On top of that, many of us are obviously drawn to the fact that there are no time limits. Others (and this holds particularly true for we in the northern climes) are simply thrilled with the excuse to get outside and enjoy a Spring day at the ballpark, whether it's Fenway Park, your local high school or the Little League field down the street.

Call the schools. Check out the papers. If your hometown baseball or softball team isn't playing today, it shouldn't be hard to find another game in a neighboring or nearby town. Believe me, it's a great way to spend a free afternoon.

unusual," said coach Orcutt. "The good news is that this will give some of our younger players valuable experience. Hopefully, by the Hanover game, we'll be completely healthy for the first time this year and at full strength. Because, looking ahead, our schedule gets tougher and tougher, and we'll need everyone at one hundred percent."

beating Hanover, the Cohasset White 12-U team (fifth and sixth grades) was squaring off with Falmouth. Perhaps learning from the high school varsity's first defeat of the season on Friday night, the White team fended off early challenges to pull away after a close first quarter.

Peter Oswald and Mark Flibotte scored four goals each, to prove that the team's newly installed 1-set offense would work for the attack. Peter Ernst (2 goals) played at what seemed like 150% energy level whenever he was in the game either forcing a turnover, leading a fast break, or taking it to the cage himself.

T.J. Kennedy, Charlie Czerkawski, Sean Silvia, Danny Brady and Owen Landon picked up single markers for Cohasset, with Chris Mills picking up two assists and Andrew Bell and Justin Connors scoring once each. Oswald added two assists.

Though not really tested in the cage, Justin Hollis and Wes Ulmer gave solid performances as well, each coming up with 6 saves during their 2 quarters of play. The defense was led by a formidable effort by Jake Cuneo who, as one of the more physical players on the Blue team, made sure that the Hanover crew thought twice before coming into the scoring zone.

Finally, it was the Cohasset 14-U team continuing the trend of hot starts and big leads, as it jumped out to a 7-1 edge over Hanover, fended off a brief rally that made the score 8-4 and then rolled to a 19-5 win.

With a number of players away on vacation or injured, Cohasset juggled the lineup and got outstanding performances from players at new positions. Leading the way was Dan Trendowicz who started the game at midfield, switched to attack in the first quarter, and went on to score six goals. Four of Trendowicz's goals were assisted by Mike Pecca on textbook fast-break passes. Pecca also scored a goal of his own on a great feed from Aidan Buick.

Cohasset closed out the first half with a 12-4 lead thanks to two goals each from Chris Davis and Jared Kinch. Davis finished the day with three goals, giving Cohasset three players with three or more goals after Buick tallied his third in the second half.

Goalie Jared Dick and the close defense of Robert Silvia, Patrick Flynn, Parker Berg, Dan McCarthy and Kinch completely shut down Hanover in the second half, allowing just one goal and few good scoring chances. Jeff Brown played well on defense in the first half and then switched to midfield for the second stanza and notched his first score of the season. Austen Lanzillotti had a goal and an assist on the game, making it eight different Cohasset players who had at least one point. Zack Etkind played his best game in two years, with several hard hits on Hanover players and scoring two goals with great individual effort by bulling his way past several defenders for each score.

The boys teams head back on the road on Sunday April 21, while the girls youth teams return to action with their first-ever home games, scheduled for 1 and 2:30 p.m. at the Deer Hill School.

Lady Laxers top Barnstable, 15-7

The Girls lacrosse team went to 2-1 on the season with an impressive 15-7 win over Barnstable on Thursday..

As usual, senior captain Kristen Sheerin quarterbacked the offense and finished with a game best seven points (five goals, two assists). Maura McKenna (four goals, one assist) and Nicole Turgiss (three goals, one assist) also contributed mightily o the attack.

Even stalwart defenders Catherine Coyne (goal) and Maggie O'Neill (assist) got in on the act. The majority of their time, though, was spent protecting the win for goalie Gia Petrakis (17 saves).

Boating safety course

The U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary and the Cohasset Recreation Department will sponsor a four-session safe boating course, offering certification by both the Coast Guard and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The course will be offered to both youth and adults; however, certification in this course is mandatory for 16-year-olds and under, who wish to operate any horsepower craft. U.S.C.G.A. instructors will teach the four-session course, scheduled to begin Thursday evening, May 9, at Cohasset High School. Classes will meet each Tuesday and Thursday evening, from 7:30 to about 9 p.m., May 9 through May 23. Certification test will be held at the fifth and final class at 7:30 p.m., May 23.

To register, call the Cohasset Recreation Department office at 781-383-4109, as soon as possible, as class will be limited in size and participants will be enrolled on first-call basis. There will be a $35 per person fee for this program, which covers the cost of the text book and class materials.

While the class is designed for children/youth and adults, it is suggested that children age 12 and under be accompanied by a participating adult. A segment of the class will be devoted to the new laws regulating personal water craft.

Certification cards will be issued and most insurance companies will offer insurance rate discounts to those completing this course.

looking good with just five errors in the two games, according to the coach.

Reality set in with game number three when Norton thumped Cohasset, 18-9. At one point, the third inning, Cohasset was tied with Norton at 5-5, but Norton was just too big and too experienced to take down.

"We saw pitching we just were not use to seeing," said coach Bostwick. "They were throwing sinkers, fast pitches, quite a variety. We did find them for two triples and two doubles, but we also made a lot of mistakes."

The Cohasset teams consists of Danielle Pinkus at shortstop, Rachel Doyle at third, Caitlin Gontarz at second, Andrea Keating at first and pitcher, Heather Perino, starting pitcher and first baseman, Casey Anderson, catcher and outfielders Allison Isodean, Cecelia Chapman, Caitlin Condon, Emma Grinnell, Molly Ogrodnik and Molly Liddell.

Cohasset will be idle during school vacation week, but will return to action on Tuesday, April 23 against Abington at Cohasset. The Cohasset team will take to the road on Wednesday, April 24, for a game against Carver,

"I'm looking for a .500 season," said the coach, revealing her upgraded goal. "That would be a real confidence builder."

Canine boarders make for close quarters at shelter

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

The Scituate Animal Shelter is going to the dogs — literally.

For the first time shelter director Joan McCafferty can remember, there are more than a dozen dogs awaiting adoption at the Driftway facility. Normally, the no-kill shelter, which serves Scituate, Norwell, Hingham and Hull houses anywhere from three to seven dogs, but in recent weeks, the shelter staff has taken in three times that number.

"It's been this way for a few weeks now," said McCafferty. "All of a sudden dogs are just coming out of the woodwork." Currently the shelter has 10 dogs in-house and is boarding five others with local families until more space is available.

McCafferty said she received three more calls this week from families looking to give up their dogs, and notes that these are not older pets with health problems. Two of the three dogs are under a year old including a 10-month-old golden retriever and a 6-month-old black Labrador retriever. Remy — a purebred Irish setter found roaming the streets of Norwell, and Mason — an affectionate hound/husky mix, are two more young dogs available for adoption, McCafferty noted.

"Sometimes it turns out the dogs were Christmas presents and six months later when they're not trained and have become more than people can handle, they decide they aren't that cute puppy under the tree anymore," McCafferty said.

While the shelter has kennels to accommodate about 16 dogs, McCafferty said more dogs mean more vet bills, a need for more food and supplies, and many more volunteers to take the dogs out on the six or seven walks they get each day.

Adding to the problem is the fact that food donations are down, said shelter volunteer Cheryl Coates. Coates hand painted a number of wooden collection bins and placed them in area grocery stores to collect contributions of dog and cat food, kitty litter and other pet supplies. While the bins are usually filled each week, Coates said the bins have been practically empty, and the shelter has had to go out and buy more dog and cat food. The bins are set up at the Stop & Shop and Shaw's stores in Cohasset and at the Scituate Marketplace.

Fortunately, as the number of dogs has increased at the shelter, the feline residents have become fewer. McCafferty said usually there are upwards of 50 cats and right now there are only about 30 in-house. Another two cat families including a mother and a litter of kittens — about 12 cats — are in foster care.

Shelter fund-raisers like last month's yard sale which raised about $6,000, come in very handy when the shelter population is on the rise.

McCafferty urges families thinking about getting a cat or dog to visit the shelter. All dogs in the shelter's care are up to date on their shots, are spayed or neutered and have been evaluated by a trainer, McCafferty said. The adoption fee is $50 and all new owners get an informational packet on training and the animal's medical history, she said.

Thanks to the tireless work of volunteers and McCafferty's efforts the Scituate shelter has found homes for 1,850 animals since opening in 1993. McCafferty said the staff is just shy of breaking an annual adoption record of 234 this year.

"People are good about adopting," said McCafferty. "We get people in here who want to adopt older dogs — even ones with health problems — to give them a loving home for the remainder of their lives."

There are many sad stories that involve abandonment and abuse at the shelter, too. Beauty, a 5-year-old boxer was abused before her owner adopted her at age 1. When he became ill with cancer and could no longer care for her he had to give her up.

"It was a last resort, for him," said McCafferty. "She's (Beauty) a real sweetheart."

But all of the past wrongs are righted when a new family gives a dog or cat a loving home, and it makes the work all worth while, McCafferty said.

Noting that this week is "National Volunteer Week," McCafferty said the shelter is always in need of more helping hands to tackle a variety of tasks including dog walking, cleaning cages, and socializing with the animals.

The shelter is open from 4 to 6 p.m. on weekdays and from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Saturdays but because McCafferty is most often there, people can call at other times to pay a visit.

For more information on adopting a pet or volunteering call the Scituate Animal Shelter at (781) 545-8703.

Police arrested four last month

March was a very quiet month for the Cohasset Police Department. There were four arrests, one for operating after license suspended, one for operating under the influence of liquor, one for assault and battery by dangerous weapon and finally one for an outstanding warrant, Chief Robert Jackson said.

During the month of March the Police Department investigated six motor vehicle accidents, one of which resulted in personal injury. There were 98 motor vehicle citations issued totaling $3,965 in fines. Additionally there were 48 parking tickets issued for $1,625 in fines. There were five criminal complaints issued.

Also in March our Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 599 calls for police services, of those 99 were Emergency 9-1-1 calls, Jackson said.

In the month of March there were no breaking and enterings.

On March 8, Chief Brian W. Noonan retired after 28 years of loyal service to the town of Cohasset.

During the month of March members of the department participated in 164 man-hours of in-service training, 48 man-hours of specialized training and 10 man-hours of in-house training.

During the week of March 25, Det. Gregory Lennon traveled to the FBI Academy in Quantico, Va. to conduct research in various critical incident response and investigative disciplines. While at the academy, Lennon consulted with members of the Critical Incident Response Group, Crisis Management Unit, Investigative Training Unit, Practical Applications Unit and Behavioral Science Unit. Lennon received training and material that will allow him to train other members of the department in these disciplines which will serve to enhance the department's ability to respond to critical incidents involving domestic terrorism as well as our ability to manage and resolve major criminal investigations.

During March, Officer Frederick Grassie was appointed as the department's prosecutor and Officer Garrett Hunt was appointed as day detective.

Finally thanks to the hard work of Sgt. John Conte the department received new bulletproof vests. These vests were funded by the Massachusetts Executive Office of Public Safety Bulletproof Vest Reimbursement Program and the U.S. Department of Justice Bulletproof Vest Partnership Grant. Old vests are to be declared surplus and donated to the U.S. Army, Jackson said.

WORSHIP NOTES

Three-day mission

Come Meet the Living Christ" is the theme of a dynamic three-day mission that will be given from May 5 to 7, at St. Anthony Parish. The mission will be given by the Rev. Shannon Michael Collins, C.P.M., a 37-year-old Cohasset native and a speaker who is a member of the Fathers of Mercy.

Fr. Shannon will challenge and encourage participants to make a stronger personal commitment to Christ. He will speak at 7:30 p.m. on May 5 and 6, and also celebrate a Mass at 7:30 p.m. on May 7. Confessions will be available after all talks and free babysitting for children under 10 will be provided. Families axe urged to attend.

On Monday and Tuesday mornings, Fr. Collins will celebrate a 9 a.m. Mass and give a talk for those unable to attend the evening mission. Coffee and conversation will be offered in the parish center.

Collins, who was ordained in 2000, graduated from Cohasset High School and was a former teacher at St. Jerome School, Weymouth. He is now the vocations director for the Fathers of Mercy, a congregation founded in 1806 (originally under the title Missionaries of France). The congregation's purpose was to re-evangelize the French people after the Church had been subjected to years of persecution during the French Revolution. It is now exclusively an American community whose primary apostolate is evangelizing through parish missions and retreats.

Marathon women

Nike celebrates 30th anniversary for female runners

By Amy Lambiaso
ALAMBIAS@CNC.COM

Women are not physically or psychologically able to run the distance of 26.2 miles.

That's what the Boston Athletic Association told Roberta "Bobbi" Gibb when rejecting her 1966 application to run the Boston Marathon.

The marathon distance wouldn't be the true test for Gibb—she had been running more than 40 miles a shot during her training. The real test would be when the world realized what she was doing.

She was the first woman to ever step foot in the crowd of men at Hopkinton, jumping out of the bushes to join the middle of the pack. Wearing a hooded sweatshirt to hide her identity for as long as possible, she broke the rules to make history.

Three hours and 20 minutes later, Gibb crossed the finish line, without the sweatshirt, becoming the first woman to ever run in the Boston Marathon, albeit unofficially.

"No one thought women could do that," Gibb said at Nike's celebration of women runners held in Boston Friday. "That day would change what the world would think about women forever." Gibb was on hand to answer questions along with two-time Boston Marathon Champion Joan Benoit-Samuelson and last year's winner—Catherine Ndereba.

It wasn't until 1972 when the American Athletic Union (AAU) changed its rules, allowing women to officially run in the Boston Marathon. Thirty years later women of all ages, from all walks of life are gearing up to prove their place in the sport more than ever.

Boston Marathon Champion Joan Benoit-Samuelson

At the time of Gibb's breakthrough the AAU didn't let women run long distances because it believed the stress would damage their reproductive systems.

But today 6,500 of the 16,700 runners in the Boston Marathon are women. And Carole Tierney of Scituate thinks crossing the finish is the biggest statement a woman can make to the world.

"Accomplishing a marathon is not an easy thing," Tierney said. "For a woman, or any person to finish that race is amazing. It says so much about them."

Tierney is part of more than a dozen 40-year-old women from the South Shore running the marathon together, proving that age and gender are no match for these women.

"Even as we all get older, we still feel great because we do this," said Kelly Keelan of Pembroke. "We look younger, we have more enthusiasm, and we feel so good about ourselves."

And Gibb said that was her goal all along. As she trained in nurse's shoes for the marathon in 1966 she could see the future of women's marathon running.

"I fell in love with marathons in 1964 when I came to the Boston Marathon," Gibb said. "The runners were all so strong."

"I could see part of the human spirit being lost that I really connected with. And I wanted to get it back"

The spirit she said is what makes the Boston Marathon so great. It's the atmosphere and whole experience of the day that brings her back time and again to compete.

"It was amazing to see so many people cheering for me as I came down the stretch," she said. "Truly something so great."

Hingham resident Jill Faller said running the marathon is something she wants to do for herself and her family. The 36-year-old ran the Bay State marathon before having two children, and wants to show her daughter that women can do whatever they set their minds to.

"To be able to do something like this is amazing," Faller said. "All I want for my daughter is for her to have these opportunities and experience what she wants."

Faller said she is so thankful for people like Gibb who broke the ground for women, and for all those who have carried on to prove women's great abilities.

One of those great women is Freeport, Maine native Benoit-Samuelson. As the winner of the first-ever women's Olympic Marathon in 1984, she exceeded all expectations of what women had done before by crushing the world record in the event.

Roberta "Bobbi" Gibb fields questions along with two-time Boston Marathon Champion Joan Benoit-Samuelson and last year's winner— Catherine Ndereba during Nike's celebration of women runners held Friday in Boston.

Benoit-Samuelson still holds the American record in the marathon today clocking in at 2:21:21 in the '85 Chicago marathon.

"Bobbi (Gibb) got the world thinking women could run that far," Benoit-Samuelson said. "I never would have had the opportunity to do this if she had never taken that chance."

Today women compete in more marathons, in more cities than ever before. Without any restrictions, anywhere in the world, it is a true sign of how far women have come, Tierney said.

Tierney ran the Paris Marathon in June of last summer, and said she was surprisingly welcome at the event.

"I was very highly accepted," she said. "It was a very good feeling to be in a male-dominated sport and a male-dominated country and be so well received."

Tierney said she wore an American flag on her back belonging to her late father during the race as a tribute to her country, her father and all who were watching.

Now the privilege to run the Boston Marathon during this special year is even greater she said.

"As a woman today I feel strong and beautiful," she said. "I feel very at ease and accepted when I step to the starting line."

Thirty-six years after Gibb sneaked onto the course she can feel that ease as well. After running last year to raise money for the Angel Fund — which supports research for Lou Gherig's disease — Gibb took this year off, but she plans on getting back into the race soon.

South Shore bands score big at BMA

Aerosmith, Superhoney, Dave Foley Band bring home trophies

CORRESPONDENT

Post-punk thrash, metal, alterna-rock, not to mention old-school arena rock, once again dominated the spotlight at the 15th annual Boston Music Awards ceremony held last Thursday at the Orpheum Theatre in Boston.

But the 2002 BMA spread the honors around more than in past years. There were no massive single-artist sweeps of four or more trophies this time around. Big winners this year included Godsmack, Staind and Aerosmith, each taking home two prizes. Other major category winners included Carly Simon, American Hi-Fi, Reveille, the Dropkick Murphys, Tribe of Judah and Kay Hanley, while 1980s alternative music pioneers Mission of Burma were the latest group to be inducted into the BMA Hall of Fame.

Mission of Burma (MOB) was among the usual scattering of winners and nominees with ties to or based on the South Shore. MOB vocalist/bassist/keyboardist has been a Quincy resident for many years.

Three of Aerosmith's members including Steven Tyler make their homes on the South Shore. Tyler and Joey Kramer live in Marshfield and Joe Perry likes in Duxbury. Aerosmith took the prizes for Album of the Year (Just Push Play) and Video of the Year ("Jaded").

Other South Shore winners at this year's BMAs included Superhoney, led by soulful front-woman Joan Pimental of Hingham, which for the second year in a row won the award for Outstanding Funk Band. Another two-time winner was Hull-based roots-country combo The Dave Foley Band, which took home Outstanding Country Act for the second time in three years.

It's been a year since the blues came to Plymouth via Ricky T's — a hip nightclub tucked away in Cordage Park.

Ricky T's will celebrate with a special anniversary show Friday, April 19, which the club owner and staff hope will also kick off another great year as the South Shore's best new blues venue.

The party gets underway at 7:30 p.m. and features two live acts rather than the club's usual single headliner. On stage will be nationally-known Chicago Blues house-rockers Studebaker John & the Hawks and South Shore-based doo-wop a cappella vocal quintet Avenue X.

"We're happy with how our first year has gone. We feel we're now on the map of the area blues and jazz club scene," said Rick Thurstone of Plymouth— for whom the club is named. "I think blues and jazz fans in the area feel they can come here and get a high-quality show for an affordable price in a friendly and relaxing club atmosphere."

Jazz trumpet player and vocalist Johnny Souza is a fixture at the Plymouth blues club.

From the beginning Thurstone said the premise behind Ricky T's was to offer a variety of high-quality entertainment, not just blues and jazz, at a reasonable price, in an atmosphere where women as well as men can feel comfortable.

Dressing up vanilla ice cream

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Although I am the author of "The Dessert Bible," I often opt for a dead simple dessert, especially if I am serving an impromptu dinner to neighbors. The easiest of these desserts are quick sauces served over store-bought vanilla ice cream. Sound plain? Sure, but a homemade raspberry, caramel, or chocolate sauce is just enough to dress up an otherwise ordinary offering.

If I am really pressed for time, a splash of good after-dinner liquor over a double scoop of Edie's Dreamery (not Edie's Grand) vanilla ice cream (the Cook's Illustrated first place winner) does the trick. I wondered, though, which liquor would be best? Sherry, port, and Armagnac were all winners. But would they taste better if simmered first into a syrupy consistency? I tested this approach, even adding sugar, cinnamon bark, allspice berries, cloves, peppercorns, etc. but the liquor had lost both its bite and identity. The result? A splash of sherry, port, or Armagnac over vanilla ice cream works just fine on its own.

Raspberry Sauce

Next, I investigated a simple fruit sauce. I opted for frozen rather than fresh since I was aiming for an all-season recipe. Blueberries and strawberries were disappointing – they were either watery or flat-tasting. Raspberries, on the other hand, hold their flavor and looked great to boot. Using a 12-ounce bag of frozen raspberries, I found that 2/3 cup of sugar and a tablespoon of lemon juice were just right. They required cooking for best flavor and consistency and a skillet cooked faster than a saucepan. A potato masher and a strainer finished the sauce and a touch of Cointreau or similar liqueur finished it off nicely.

RASPBERRY SAUCE

Only add a small amount of the liqueur at first and then taste the sauce before adding more.

12 ounces frozen raspberries
2/3 cup sugar
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 to 2 tablespoons orange flavored liqueur such as Cointreau or liqueur of your choice (optional)

Place the berries, sugar and lemon juice in a heavy-duty non-reactive skillet over medium heat. Bring the mixture to a boil and reduce heat to maintain an energetic simmer. Cook for about 5 minutes or until the mixture is thickened slightly, stirring occasionally. Half way through the cooking process press on the mixture with a potato masher to help break down the berries. Transfer the mixture to a mesh strainer (fine enough to capture the seeds) set over a bowl. Using a rubber spatula work the juice and pulp through the strainer until only a sticky mass of seeds remains. Discard the seeds. Stir the sauce to even out the consistency. Add the optional liquor. Serve at room temperature or chilled. Keeps in the refrigerator for several days.

Makes one cup.

Caramel Sauce

Caramel sauce is made from caramelized sugar with the addition of cream and/or butter. The trickiest part of the sauce is caramelizing the sugar so I decided to begin there. Sugar can be caramelized by either the wet or dry method. I have found that the wet method – water is added to the sugar at the outset of the process – is more foolproof and easier. I also found that the addition of lemon juice helps to avoid crystallization. My next concern was that once the sugar starts to color it goes from gold to burnt in a very short amount of time. I found I could lower the heat at the point where the sugar starts to color and the transformation from blond to dark amber is more controlled. (I also take the pan entirely off the heat as it begins to color, swirling the syrup as it cooks.) The time it takes to caramelize sugar will vary dramatically (from 8 to 15 minutes) depending on the type of saucepan you are using.

As for other ingredients, cream and butter made for the smoothest and most balanced sauce. After several batches I preferred 3/4 cup heavy cream and 2 tablespoons of unsalted butter to 1 1/2 cups sugar. A healthy pinch of salt was also welcome. The cream needs to be added carefully in small additions. (It can be heated to minimize the bubbling but the extra step and pan aren't really worth the effort.) While the caramel sauce is thick, intensely flavored, and delicious a couple tablespoons of rum or bourbon are a great addition. For a chocolate variation, try adding a few ounces of chopped bittersweet chocolate to the caramel sauce (whisked in while the sauce was still hot) The sauce keeps well in the refrigerator and may be reheated over low heat.

CARAMEL SAUCE

The type and size of saucepan will dramatically impact the cooking time. For a chocolate variation, add four ounces finely chopped semisweet or bittersweet chocolate to the finished sauce and stir until melted and well blended.

1 1/2 cups granulated sugar
1/2 cup water
1/4 teaspoon lemon juice
3/4 cups heavy cream
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
Pinch of salt
2 tablespoons dark rum or bourbon (optional)

Place the sugar, water and lemon juice in a small saucepan over medium heat. Stir to combine. Bring to a boil and cook until the mixture just begins to color, six to 12 minutes depending on your pan and cook top. Reduce heat to low and cook until dark amber, about two minutes longer, swirling the pan off the heat if the caramel colors unevenly. Remove from the heat. Very carefully add the heavy cream a little at a time since it will bubble vigorously, stirring after each addition. Add the butter and salt and stir until the butter is melted and the sauce uniform. Add the optional rum and stir to combine. Serve warm. May be kept covered in the refrigerator for several days and reheated over low heat until warm.

Makes about 1 1/4 cup

Chocolate Sauce

For a chocolate sauce, I tested hot fudge sauce, ganache, a chocolate glaze, and a cocoa based sauce. I felt the ganache was the grandest of them all: thick and rich. For the working recipe I started with one-cup heavy cream and 10 ounces of bittersweet or semisweet chocolate. In such sauces the addition of corn syrup, granulated sugar, butter, and vanilla is common. However, by adding sugar instead of corn syrup the sauce was thicker. Two tablespoons butter added shine and body and 1/2 teaspoon vanilla offered balance. In terms of technique, I borrowed a technique from Marcel Desaulniers' "Death by Chocolate" and added the chopped chocolate to the hot cream. I liked his method since there is no chance the chocolate can overcook.

CHOCOLATE SAUCE

Use the best chocolate you can find. Callebaut is my first choice but Ghirardelli is also very good.

1 cup heavy cream
2 tablespoons granulated sugar
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
12 ounces bittersweet or semi-sweet chocolate, finely chopped
1/2 teaspoon pure vanilla extract

Place the cream, sugar and butter in a small saucepan over medium low heat. Bring to a simmer. Extinguish heat, add the chocolate and cover the pan. Let sit for 5 minutes. Add the vanilla and whisk mixture until smooth and shiny. It will look curdled until it comes together. Serve warm. May be refrigerated for several days and reheated over low heat until warm.

Makes about 2 cups.

South Shore bands score big at BMA

ed with her pre-solo career band The Blake Babies and released God Bless the Blake Babies, on Rounder Records this past year, was up for Outstanding Album (Indie Label) but lost out to alterna-club favorites The Sheila Divine. And Stoughton acoustic singer/songwriter Lori McKennea was edged out by folk-rocker Melissa Ferrick for Outstanding Female Singer/Songwriter.

Godsmack followed up its stellar showings in the BMAs of 2000 and '01 with two more awards this year, including Outstanding Rock Band and Male Vocalist of the Year for snarling frontman Sully Erna. The band also delivered one of the evening's best live performances with its heavy-thrashing, nominated but non-winning single "Greed." Gloomy Springfield alterna-rockers Staind won for Act of the Year and for Single of the Year (the thoughtful, chart-topping "Its' Been Awhile").

Along with Aerosmith, representing the old school in the main winners circle was Carly Simon, who's often ironically described as a female look-alike of fellow warhorse, Steven Tyler. Simon won for Female Vocalist of the Year. The 56-year-old songstress also offered some irony of her own with her acceptance speech comment, "I'm glad you voted for someone to represent the youth movement."

South Shore-based rockers Aerosmith took the prizes for Album of the Year (Just Push Play) and Video of the Year ("Jaded") at last week's Boston Music Awards.

Mission of Burma became legends on the Boston club scene and nationally two decades ago with its influential, experimental art-noise sound. The band's Hall of Fame induction was introduced by long-time Boston fixture Willie "Loco" Alexander, who shared personal memories of MOB and mentioned that a couple of its songs have more recently been covered by Moby and REM.

This year's BMA was emceed by Joey McIntyre, and other featured performances were by Must, American Hi-Fi, acoustic folkster Bill Morrisey, Tribe of Judah, Mission of Burma, Tracy Bonham, Kay Hanley and The Sheila Divine. The show drew the usual excited sold-out house to the Orpheum.

A year of blues at the home of the 'rock' enjoyed playing here. They're generally gracious and very appreciative of having this sort of outlet to perform, they tend not to have big egos like some rock stars and rappers do," notes Thurstone.

It's also an older and more wide-ranging clientele that Ricky T's draws, said Thurstone. "It's mainly the 25 to 55 age group," he said. "And we're surprised for one thing how much of the older crowd likes to dance."

Thurstone had been a computer professional in Plymouth for 17 years when he became infatuated with live blues while on a business trip to South Carolina three years ago. To bring the blues home to Plymouth, Thurstone teamed up with designer friend Lin Morris to create an urban club atmosphere from a space in a restored Cordage Park warehouse.

As a result, Ricky T's expands somewhat on the interior and entertainment style of nearby Handlebar Harry's, sporting a bar, stage, dance floor, state-of-the-art sound system and indoor seating capacity for 98, plus wood flooring, beam ceilings and large wood pillars to effectively bring a taste of the old-school city clubs to Plymouth.

In its first year, Ricky T's was able to tap into not only the Boston but national market of blues bands for its 2001 concert series. Among the artists who've appeared are such homegrown favorites as Sugar Ray & the Bluetones, guitarist Duke Robillard, soulful blues vocalists Nicole Nelson and Michelle Wilson and good-time swing-bluesters The Love Dogs, plus nationally touring acts like Louisiana guitar-slinger Tab Benoit and Chicago singer/harpist Carey Bell.

For the coming season, Thurstone is sure the club can expand on its already healthy musical lineup, and plans to venture into other entertainment areas as well. April will also kick off a monthly standup comedy series, originally set to begin last fall but delayed for what the club owner described as reasons of appropriateness following September 11.

"We were somewhat limited with the kind of acts we could bring in last year to cover costs. But the bands that we had all enjoyed playing here and this year we should be able to bring them all back plus more," Thurstone said. "We're already booked through the end of June and into July."

Maintaining the Blooms of April

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler

During the early weeks of April, the long-anticipated signs of spring greet enthusiastic gardeners around every corner. Each day, Mother Nature applies another brush stroke of color to the broadening palette of the emerging spring landscape. Gardens are dotted with colorful clumps of early tulips, daffodils and grape hyacinths. Spectacular mound of golden yellow forsythia create dazzling displays. Flowering quince bushes glow from afar, their multitude of vibrantly colored blossoms in shades of coral, pink, or fiery orange-red paint the landscape with cheerful abandon. Spring has surely sprung!

A profusion of lovely pink cherry and plum blossoms create a fairy-land of delicate, fleeting beauty. The showy, satiny flowers of star and saucer magnolias have burst into bloom and with no freezing temperatures in our upcoming forecast, their impressive blossoms may actually escape their traditional frost damage this season. Few trees rival the beauty of the early-blooming ornamental pears (Pyrus calleryana spp.). Rapidly gaining in popularity in recent years for use as street trees in both urban and residential areas, these perfectly-formed trees produce magnificent clouds of glistening, pure white blossoms followed by deep green, glossy leaves that persist well into the fall. These handsome specimens are tolerant of drought, poor soils and pollution and seldom require pruning.

Carpets of deep blue scillas and lavender chionodoxa create a magnificent backdrop for daffodils, which are putting on a splendid exhibition this spring. A gentle breeze carries the sweet perfume of heavenly hyacinths across the garden. Dense clusters of fragrant pink, white and deep blue bell-shaped flowers appear on thick, stout stems year after year. Drifts of grape hyacinths in shades of blue and a pure white form are perfect companions for primroses, pansies, tulips and daffodils.

Nearly every gardener has experimented with spring-flowering bulbs at some time.

These spring delights are generally planted as dormant bulbs during the early autumn of the previous season. Occasionally, the results of the efforts may be somewhat disappointing. The bulbs fail to come up or after a year or two, they stop flowering altogether. To ensure success, an understanding of what bulbs are and their cultural requirements may help you to select those that will best suit your needs and your growing conditions in the future.

The term "bulb" has come to encompass a large group of plants that are able to store energy in fleshy, underground structures. Only some of these are "true bulbs," including tulips, daffodils, hyacinths and lilies. A planting of true bulbs usually grows larger each year by producing new bulbs alongside the original parent bulb, which also continues to grow and produce flowers. Daffodils are prime examples. Their offspring can be seen when purchasing dormant bulbs with multiple "noses", each having the capability of producing blossoms the following season.

Although tulips are also true bulbs, after a few growing seasons the parent bulb dies, leaving only immature bulbs alongside that omen produce only leaves. No gardener car resist the beauty of a perfectly formed tulip but to enjoy their exquisite blooms each year, new bulbs should be planted every second or third season.

All bulbs prefer loose, porous soils with excellent drainage to prevent rotting. Heavy, clay soils should be amended with sand and organic matter to improve drainage. Raised beds are ideal. The large majority of bulbs perform best in sunny locations although sites that are shaded as the result of deciduous trees are acceptable as filtered sunlight will reach the plants during their active growth.

As mature bulbs, daffodils, hyacinths and other true bulbs have all the nutrients stored within their outer layers to produce flowers the first year. For reliable bloom in subsequent years, snip spent flowers so energy is not wasted producing seedpods. More importantly, it is essential that the foliage of the bulbs not be removed until it is brown, for this is how the plant manufactures food to carry the bulb through dormancy and produce next year's flowers. An application of fertilizer while these bulbs are actively growing will further assist in their annual return. Water throughout the growing season.

The waning foliage of crocuses, which are actually corms rather than true bulbs, tulips and many minor bulbs, although admittedly unsightly, tends to decline fairly rapidly but daffodil foliage seems to persist forever. Once standing tall and stately, their dense clumps of strap-like leaves flop and sprawl unattractively into early summer. Although most members of the narcissus family grow only a foot or so in height, they bloom early enough in the season to merit positioning them toward the middle of the border where their handsome blooms can be easily admired before the foliage of other perennials really any significant height. As their leaves deteriorate, the expanding foliage of surrounding perennials will hide the yellowing bulb foliage. Daylilies are particularly suitable companion plants, their dense, slender leaves gently arching to form mounds over the fading daffodil foliage.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 17

Enthusiasm and energy run high, making this an exceptional day across the board. Influences are prime for launching enterprises, sharing ideas, making long-range plans and goals. Get new projects off the ground before 3:12 p.m., when Mercury forms a harmonious contact to expansive Jupiter. Lunar alignments to the sun and Uranus reinforce a sun/Uranus alignment this evening. Change your routine and do something different. The Gemini moon becomes inactive at 10:17 p.m.

THURSDAY, APRIL 18

The moon enters the sign Cancer at 2:01 a.m., placing the focus on home and family matters. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Neptune can make for a slow start. Creativity and artistic sensitivity run high. On the other hand, important signings and practical decisions are off limits. Lunar alignments to Jupiter and Mercury make this an evening to share a special dinner with family and close friends.

FRIDAY, APRIL 19

This is a wonderful day to tackle projects around the home. Beautify your surroundings; purchase new appliances, repaint or renovate, tackle spring cleaning chores or go on a cooking, baking spree. The moon continues to travel in domestic Cancer and forms a flowing 60-degree contact to Venus at 7:55 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Spend extra time with children and pets. Be more nurturing and sensitive to the needs of others. Plan a quiet evening.

SATURDAY, APRIL 20

The sun enters Taurus at 2:21 a.m., remaining there until May 21. The moon enters Leo at 8:21 a.m., and the green light goes on for new beginnings across the board. At 8:48 a.m. the first quarter phase of the moon occurs. A full moon is building and will culminate April 26. This evening is one of the best for partying. Forget your troubles and let the good times roll.

SUNDAY, APRIL 21

A Leo moon prompts you to take a vacation from routine and responsibilities. Go with your playful side. Enjoy favorite sports, hobbies, friends. On the other hand, if you are working you can make gains developing projects that need financial or moral support from others.

MONDAY, APRIL 22

A lunar opposition to Uranus at 8:30 a.m. can make for a rough start to this day. Take it slow and easy. Pay extra attention to details. At this time the Leo moon becomes inactive until 11:35 a.m., when it enters industrious Virgo. Roll up your sleeves and plan to get a lot accomplished this afternoon. Zero in on jobs that have been left hanging and need a finishing touch. You can be most productive. Sidestep fears, worries between 8:05-11:05 p.m., when the moon aligns with Mars.

TUESDAY, APRIL 23

Stormy astrological weather makes for a challenging day. The best way to channel today's influences is to stay busy. Clean out and reorganize; get your life in order. Stock up on healthy foods and vitamins. Get back on track with diets and physical fitness programs. The Virgo moon forms potentially stressful 90-degree alignments to Saturn in the morning and Pluto in the afternoon. In addition, Venus forms a 90-degree contact to Uranus. Others may be irritable, difficult to please. Compliments will work better than criticism.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 24

A full moon is building up, adding energy and intensity to the next couple of days. It's a good time to take on a big work project. You can be most productive. The Virgo moon aligns with Venus at 10:06 a.m. and becomes inactive. At 12:22 p.m. the moon enters Libra, generating a social mood. This is a wonderful afternoon/evening for making new contacts, meeting people, establishing new partnerships.

Cemetery gates get new life

Board wants to tap new fund

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Beechwood Cemetery — which was built on land donated by early settlers Aaron Pratt and Isaac Bates back in the 18th century — is one of the most historic sites in town.

"We just want to get the project in the pipeline early so the committee has plenty of time to look at it."
— Glenn Pratt, Cemetery Study Committee

The Cemetery Study Committee recently completed expansion and renovation at the town-owned cemetery, and would like to restore the old cemetery gates, which were found in a shed at the site.

Landscaper sounds the alarm at condo complex

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln, left, discusses strategy with firefighter Randy Rosano during the two-alarm fire in a unit at 100 Pond Street on Monday morning.

Attic fire causes major damage

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Scott Tausevich of Lawn King usually looks down as he spreads fertilizer on the grass at the condominium complex, dubbed 100 Pond Street. But at about 9 a.m. Monday morning a loud popping sound caught his attention so he looked up.

"I told them to call 9-1-1."
— Scott Tausevich, landscaper

"I could see smoke billowing from the vents," he said about unit 42. Tausevich didn't waste any time. He ran over and pounded on the front door of all three of condominium units in the building, finally raising an elderly couple in unit 44.

"I told them to call 9-1-1," he said.

No one was injured in what turned out to be a two-alarm fire, possibly caused by a ceiling fan or ceiling fan and light combination in an upstairs bathroom of unit 42. The nearly 20-year-old complex consists of some attached and some

Tiny structure could sprout floors

Townhouse would triple building size

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The small structure was once a candy shop. In another life, it was a fish store.

Could a three-story townhouse be in its future?

Tom Fogarty, owner of the small building at 95 Elm St., across from Kimball's at the harbor, would like to expand the structure into a townhouse-like home for his family that includes his wife and two children.

But before he can do that, Fogarty needs special permits from the Zoning Board of Appeals.

The former shop is in the downtown business zone, so Fogarty needs zoning relief for a residence, which is only allowed by special permit in that zone.

He also needs a special permit to expand a non-conforming use because the existing structure does not meet certain setback requirements.

The building, which abuts James Brook, is also in the flood plain and the small backyard can get water as often as monthly during certain high tides.

Fogarty would like to create a drive-through and utility area on the first floor with the living area on the second and third floors.

The family cars would drive through a breezeway through the first floor into the backyard where there is just enough room for a three-point turn so the vehicles could turn around and come out frontward.

Fogarty would request special mirrors either across Elm Street or attached to the house to provide motor vehicle operators exiting the breezeway with a way to see what's coming along Elm Street.

Plans are to maintain the existing footprint of the house and build up. The second floor would consist of the master bedroom, kitchen, dining area, and living room. The third floor would have two more bedrooms and two baths and a small deck area. The total area would be about 2,140 square feet which would about triple the building's current size.

The building would meet the maximum allowed height requirement of 35 feet.

Although the plans do not increase the nonconformity in relation to side setbacks,

Local family takes the stage in 'Oliver'

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Dramatic Club can make its participants feel like they are all one big family — maybe that's because some of them are.

The Murrays, 8 West Gate Lane, will all participate in the dramatic club's upcoming show "Oliver," which premiers this weekend at Town Hall and runs through the next three weekends.

Betts Murray and her husband Wisner, are singing in the adult chorus while their daughter, Polly, portrays an orphan. However, the Murrays' son, Wiz, will be claiming most of the spotlight when the family takes the stage, because he landed the lead role of Oliver.

While no one else in the family has any significant time on stage, young Wiz has been acting for some time. He has acted in "Oliver" before as well as performing in plays such as "The King and I," and "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat."

Neighbor wants Red Lion's roar to become whisper

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Red Lion wants to be a good neighbor but an abutter says the establishment — that includes an inn, bar, restaurant and function halls — must live up to its promises.

Reacting to complaints from a neighbor, the Planning Board has asked the Red Lion Inn to provide it with a set of "as built" plans, which are blueprints that depict a final picture of what was built at the site.

Rena Karp, 91 S. Main Street, said she is continually bombarded with loud noise and invasive lighting from the building. She also said the Red Lion Inn hasn't planted trees on the property line to shield her home from both noise and lighting as promised.

"Our main concern is that the building didn't turn out the way it was presented," she said. "They've really taken advantage of us."

Karp also said the inn agreed to restrict the parking lot, which abuts her property, for hotel guests only but that hasn't been the case.

"People are hanging out drinking and smoking all night only 20 feet from our house," she said. "I've had to call the police a number of times."

She said she can often smell the cigarette smoke if her windows are open and the loud noises can wake her family.

"When the function hall lets out, we have hundreds of people banging their doors and just generally being loud outside our house," said Karp, adding there are also large delivery trucks that block her in her driveway for up to a half hour.

Gerd Ordelheide, owner of the Red Lion Inn, said he will do everything in his power to appease his neighbor. He said he is intent on adding more screening to the parking lot as well as hiring a security guard to patrol the area after the functions are over.

"We want to address these problems to make sure we are not upsetting anyone," Ordelheide said. "Once these issues were brought to my attention I'm going to try and solve them."

"We want to address these problems to make sure we are not upsetting anyone."
— Gerd Ordelheide, owner

Ordelheide will ask all the bands that play at the inn to plug into a device which will shut down the speakers if the noise is raised over a certain decibel level.

"It's a way to try and control the noise concerns that some of the abutters have," he said. "If that doesn't work, we'll try something else."

Planning Board chairman Al Moore said while some of the issues are not necessarily planning ones, the board will do its best to assist in the situation.

"I think all the parties involved want to cooperate," Moore said. "We will provide a forum for them to discuss matters."

Moore said the "as built" plans will help the board determine where extra screening should be located if it's necessary, as well as ascertaining whether the parking lot is too large.

"There was a pretty good give and take session," Moore said concerning the meeting last week. "It's a situation which should be able to be worked out."

Town Planner Liz Harrington said if the board finds anything on the final plans that is outside what was originally approved, it will send a letter to Building Inspector Bob Egan.

"We are going to try and resolve any problems the two sides may have," Harrington said. "It's pretty clear everyone wants to do the right thing."

Harrington said there is significant screening depicted in the original plans that the board will examine.

"We're want to make sure everything we approved actually got done," she said.

Resignation announced

Patti Keville, the town's representative to the Metropolitan Area Planning Council as well as a member of the Growth and Development Committee, announced her resignation from the two boards this week. Keville is moving from Cohasset so will no longer be able to serve on either of the boards.

Selectman Tom Callahan said she will be missed.

"She did a lot of hard work for this town," he said. "I just want to thank her for all she has done."

Town Manger Mark Haddad was appointed as an interim replacement to be the town's representative to MAPC.

Senior meeting

On May 21, there will be a meeting between Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, the Council on Elder Affairs, the South Shore Elder Services and the selectmen to discuss the impact of the anticipated state budget cuts on programs for seniors. All residents are encouraged to attend.

Lincoln to stay

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln has agreed to delay his retirement for at least one year and continue at his current position. Town Manager Mark Haddad said he approached Lincoln a couple of weeks ago and asked him to stay.

"With two new department heads at the police department and the department of public works, I felt the town would best be served by some stability in the fire department," he said. "Roger (Lincoln) has served the town well for more than 32 years and I appreciate his willingness to stay."

Lincoln said he didn't take much convincing.

"I'm looking forward to staying in the fire department another year," Lincoln said. "It's the best job in the world."

Lincoln will be paid what is budgeted for the fire chief's position, said Haddad who entered into a one-year contract extension with Lincoln. "There is no impact on the fiscal year 2003 operating budget," he said.

Liquor license

Selectmen granted a one day liquor license for the Art for Living Design Gallery on April 26 from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. for a grand opening reception to allow customers and artists to meet.

Teacher claims discrimination

Files suit against school with MCAD

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

A popular Cohasset high school teacher, who suffers from multiple sclerosis, has filed a complaint with the state alleging school officials have discriminated against her because of her illness.

Eileen Rohrer, an art teacher at Cohasset high since 1995, filed the claim with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination, alleging that school principal Michael Jones, and assistant principal Jack DeLorenzo, have both discriminated against her and failed to accommodate her needs.

While he wouldn't comment on specifics regarding the case, superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey said the claims are unfounded.

"We have evidence to refute her statements," Malvey said. "Those are not accurate statements and are simply her interpretation."

In a telephone interview Jones declined to comment, and referred calls on the matter directed to him and DeLorenzo to Malvey.

In her affidavit, Rohrer states having MS is a major impairment in her life. She said she has difficulty with walking and maintaining her balance, and she is often fatigued and sometimes suffers from migraines and speech difficulties.

Rohrer, who has been a teacher since 1979 having worked in both Weymouth and Belmont, added due to the nature of MS, the frequency and severity of her symptoms vary. The only certainty being that stress will exacerbate her symptoms.

She further claims that when she relayed this information and requests for accommodation to the school, "it retaliated against me, discriminated against me and has failed to reasonably accommodate me."

Rohrer, a Golden Apple Award recipient for best teacher in 1998, also said the school has given her a parking spot which is located outside a locked door, requiring her to walk around the perimeter of the building. She also claimed that the school gave her a poor evaluation, the first of her career, on the last day of school which violated collective bargaining agreements.

Ed Leonard, the teacher's union president, said the union has filed a grievance in relation to the evaluation.

"We would agree that evaluating a teacher on the last day of class is a violation of the collective bargaining agreement," Leonard said. "A procedure is in place and we will be meeting with an arbitrator soon."

Malvey said even though Rorher received the Golden Apple Award and had a yearbook dedicated to her, that doesn't necessarily reflect her performance.

"The award and the yearbook are both voted on by students," Malvey said. "It doesn't automatically mean a teacher is an excellent one."

Rorher also claimed that rather than being allowed to use her free periods to rest and conserve energy at home, she was given the option of lying down in the nurse's office with sick students if she became fatigued. She added Jones and DeLorenzo have started to document each time she leaves the building even though her contract allows for her to do so unimpeded.

"No other teacher is asked to notify or seek permission in any way for leaving on free time," she said.

Leonard said according to the collective bargaining contract, a teacher should be allowed to use their free time however they see fit.

"The way it is set up the free time is a teacher's professional time to do what they want," he said. However, the union is not involved with any aspect of the complaint, save the grievance on the evaluation.

Rohrer added another symptom of MS is having urgent and frequent bladder syndrome. She said when she requested help in emergency bathroom trips she was given no help and told to "ask somebody."

Currently, the complaint is being reviewed by the MCAD. A conference is scheduled for next week in which both sides will air their cases for an appointed investigator.

According to Marlania Bugg, a spokesman for MCAD, the meeting is supposed to jump start the investigative process. After the session, the investigator will examine the issues and if he finds there is probable cause for discrimination then the parties will enter the conciliation process in which they try to reach an agreement. If none can be hammered out, it goes to a public hearing. However, if the investigator finds there is no probable cause, the case is dismissed.

Rohrer has a bachelor of fine arts from the Massachusetts College of Arts as well as holding a teacher certification for visual arts in grades kindergarten through 12.

Tiny structure could sprout floors

a special permit is required because of the increase of square footage within the setback, ZBA chairman Woody Chittick said.

The proposed house would be on the sewer and would not create any greater obstruction in the flood plain than what is already there.

John and Nancy Butler, who own 97 Elm St. — where they operate their company Image Acoustics on the top floor and rent out to Global Travel on the bottom floor — spoke against the proposal. The Butlers' building is only inches from 95 Elm St. on one side.

John Butler explained that by building up next door, all windows would be blocked on that side of his building, cutting off light to the offices.

"It's a wonderful place where we are now, we love it and would hate to see it hurt," Mr. Butler said.

Chittick read a letter from the local Chamber of Commerce, which is also opposed to converting the structure from a home to a business. The chamber is against eroding the amount of business property in town and pointed out that business uses would not be allowed in a residential zone.

The Zoning Board continued the hearing until May 20.

Water main flushing continues through May 1

The Cohasset Water Department annual flushing of water mains continues Thursday (April 25), Monday (April 29), Tuesday (April 30), and Thursday (May 1).

Cohasset residents are cautioned to avoid doing laundry, running dish washers, or showing during the flushing, and are advised to turn on an outside faucet the next morning for a few minutes until the water runs clear. The flushing may cause a temporary discoloration of the water which can be remedied by running the outside faucet.

Iron Out is available free at the Lily Pond Treatment Plant, 339 King St., which will remove stains from any laundry which may be affected by the flushing. The Water Dept. office is open from 7:30 am – 3: p.m., Monday – Friday.

Residents may call the Water Department at 383-0057 if they have any questions.

"Flushing the water mains will help improve water quality."
— Water Commission Chairman John McNabb.

Plan to improve town water quality

The Board of Water Commissioners has announced its 2002 Water Systems Improvement Program, which will be funded by the $2,000,000 borrowing authorized by vote of the March 31, 2002 Annual Town Meeting and $396,155 previously authorized.

"These water system improvements will improve water quality and fire protection throughout Cohasset," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission.

These Water System Improvements will include the following:

•$1,926,355 to rehabilitate about 11,735 feet, just over two miles, of water mains throughout Cohasset, which will remedy insufficient fire flows, which were identified through fire flow tests conducted last Fall, and make other improvements that are necessary to improve fire protection, water service, and water quality throughout Cohasset, pursuant to the Tutela Capital Improvements Plan (CIP), as revised.

•$261,800 to make needed improvements to the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant, pursuant to the Weston & Sampson CIP, including the installation of Variable Frequency Drives on the Finished Water Pumps and flow paced chemical feeds.

•$100,000 for watershed protection measures, pursuant to the Norfolk RAM 5-year plan for watershed protection, which will include GIS mapping of stormwater discharges in the Lily Pond watershed, a storm-water protection plan to reduce nutrient loading in the Pond, and a limnological study of the Pond to fully identify sources of nutrients and to recommend corrective measures.

•$100,000 for annual capital maintenance, to continue to make repairs as needed and to replace and improve capital equipment on an ongoing basis.

The Water Commission also expects to spend $250,000, to be reimbursed by the MBTA, to relocate the Sohier Street well away from the Greenbush Right of Way.

"Since 1994, the Water Commission has rehabilitated over 12 miles of water mains, about 1/3 of the 36 miles of water mains in the distribution system," said McNabb.. "As we continue to make water system improvements we expect to see more improvements in fire flows, water service, and water quality in Cohasset, for the benefit of all our customers and for the Town as whole."

"As we continue to make water system improvements we expect to see more improvements in fire flows, water service, and water quality in Cohasset."

SUMMER'S COMING

Hello Cohasset, I hope that everyone had a wonderful and enjoyable school vacation week. The next couple of months seem to go really quick and then summer will be here! This year has gone by so fast that I cannot believe we are that close to summer. Make sure to stop everyday or so and really take the time to "smell the roses". I never quité understood what my mom meant when I was younger when she would say, "the older you get, the faster time seems to go" until the last few years. She was so right in what she was saying and now I wish I could hold onto those hands of time and slow them down.

NEW ARRIVAL

I always love when I can start the column off with a new baby, birthday or some other happy bit of news. This week, it is to welcome a new baby boy who was born on Jan. 20, 2002. Thomas Edward Hill is the new son of Adam and Jacqueline Hill of Millis, Mass. Thomas' grandparents are Holly and Stephan Hill of Cohasset and Dianne and Thomas Young of Stoughton. Congratulations on this wonderful bundle of joy.

NEW GRANDCHILDREN

Ned and Chartis Tebbetts are very proud to announce two of their grandchildren. Maya Priscilla Tebbetts was born on May 11, 2001 in Seattle, Wash. and is the daughter of Richard and Masako Tebbetts. Walter Tycer Tebbetts was born on March 5, 2002 and is the son of Charles and Melinda Tebbetts who all reside in Amherst, Mass. Oh, the joys of babies!

XAVERIAN HONORS

John Dwyer, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Dwyer, and Mark Lewis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kevin F. Lewis, both earned second honors at Xaverian Brothers High School for the third marking period. Students who earned 80 or above in all courses earn second honors. Great job to both of you!

SOLO EXHIBITION

Recent works by artist Peter Mallen of Cohasset will be on display at the Harvard Neighbors Gallery, Loeb House, Harvard University from April 29-June 6. Peter's solo exhibition includes sculptures in bronze and cast stone, and works on homemade paper. The gallery is open weekdays only. Call 617-495-4313 for more information.

VASSAR LACROSSE

Elizabeth Pierson, daughter of Wigmore Pierson of Atlantic Avenue, is a member of the Vassar Women's Lacrosse Team. Relay planners work behind the scenes

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

It usually comes off without a hitch. The Relay For Life in Cohasset has been raising money for four years in an effort to find a cure for cancer. But it's not just those who walk around the track that are helping the cause — it's those behind the scenes.

— RELAY FOR LIFE—

The Planning Committee for the Relay is comprised of 15 members ranging from towns all over the South Shore. The group coordinates all aspects of the event, ranging from the entertainment provided, to team recruitment and registration.

"The committee all tries to work together to maximize the fundraising efforts and meet our goals," said Jacqui Vitello, who works on public relations for the planning committee. "The planning committee is made up of many caring, supportive, and wonderful people."

Kate Langstone, the regional executive for communications at the American Cancer Society, said she relies heavily on the planning committee to organize the event. She added there is only one ACS staff person to every 700 volunteers nationwide, so the volunteer planning committees are instrumental in launching and maintaining local, Relay For Life events.

"All Relay For Life events have standard elements, but there is a lot of freedom for the planning committee to take ownership of this event and really make it their own," she said.

While the members of the committee all work on different aspects of the Relay, they all have one thing in common — their desire to help those affected by cancer.

Some, such as Victor and Justine Vanderlugt who are working on the ceremonies and entertainment aspect of the Relay, became involved with the Relay simply because they wanted to help. The Vanderlugts said they have been very fortunate and decided it was time to give something back.

Justine Vanderlugt, one of the organizers of the Cohasset Relay For Life, creates bubbles at last year's event.

"We initially became involved because it takes place near where our home is, and the fight against cancer was at the top of our list of important causes," Victor said. "We remember not wanting the event to end and from then on, we were hooked."

The couple said being on the committee is like planning an enormous wedding every year.

"There's always anxious moments leading up to the big day but once it gets rolling, the event and people's emotions take over," Justine said.

There are others who participate in the planning of the Relay that have had their lives deeply touched by the disease. Bob Clifford, who acts as a team mentor helping the teams get organized, was diagnosed with prostate cancer in 1996. He said the Relay For Life has been a part of the healing process in his recovery and is his way of giving back to those who helped him.

"I feel very fortunate to be cancer free when the outcome could have been much worse," he said. "To some degree, I think I have survivor's guilt because so many other people with cancer are not as lucky as me."

Another survivor, Lee Anne DeVries who works on the Survivor Reception, became involved with the Relay when her best friend organized a team in her honor. Last year, DeVries underwent chemotherapy while trying to raise her two toddlers.

"I have learned so much from my experience with cancer and I hope I can reach out to others," she said.

Vitello, planning team member, initially became involved with the Relay when her father passed away from cancer. She said while her father was undergoing chemotherapy a family friend urged them to attend the event.

"My parents went to the Relay For Life and I remember my father telling me how wonderful he thought the Relay was," she said.

In honor of her father, Vitello started a team named "The Chiefs" after her father, a retired police chief.

Alzheimer's support group hosts brunch

Again, Andy and Mary Ann Saporito Boothroyd have selected from their culinary favorites to present an exiting menu. Lucky winners will be chosen for the baskets of gourmet foods and wines. The Joe Micarelli trio will provide a jazz accompaniment to the food and wine.

Local heroes

Whoever said "being in the right place at the right time" could have been talking about the landscaper who initially spotted what turned out to be a two-alarm fire Monday in one of the condominiums at 100 Pond Street.

The landscaper, who was spreading fertilizer on the lawns of the complex, just happened to be in front of unit 42 when he heard a sound that caught his attention. Then he looked up and saw smoke pouring out of the attic louvers.

He pounded on the doors and told the neighbors to call 9-1-1.

When police Officer Christy Tarantino arrived, he kicked in the door and scrambled through the condo to see if anyone was home. Officer Tarantino was not thinking about his own safety, but only that of a potential victim.

Firefighters soon arrived and knocked the blaze down before it broke through the roof. If that had occurred the burst of fresh air could have spread the fire to the adjacent condominiums.

No one was home in the unit where the fire started, and no one was hurt fighting the fire.

But that doesn't take anything away from the seriousness of the situation and the potential for a tragedy.

A Cohasset engine arrived with three firefighters who made the initial attack.

An off-duty Cohasset firefighter drove the aerial ladder to the scene and every inch of the 100-foot ladder was needed to reach the roof. Other Cohasset off-duty and call firefighters arrived, along with mutual aid from Hull and Scituate fire departments.

The Red Cross also came and Hingham fire covered Cohasset headquarters. Police provided traffic control.

The events of the morning filled one with confidence that our firefighters, police and other public safety personnel are well trained and ready and willing to help – even when it presents a danger to them.

It's more than a job to these individuals – it's a way of life, a calling, if you will.

We should be grateful there are people out there with that kind of courage and dedication.

Our hat also goes off to the quick-thinking landscaper from Lawn King who sounded the alarm and may have saved the building.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Owners of dog have not called

TO THE EDITOR:

A week ago Tuesday, my son Eric was riding his bike, with a friend, along Beechwood Street on his way home; when at the corner near Riverview Drive, and across from Wheelwright Farms two ladies were walking their dog on a leash. As my son tried to go around them, their dog attacked my son's foot first and then went for his calf. They simply could not control their dog, which my son and his friend describe and a large white dog no spots and not really "long or fluffy" hair. At the time of the bite, the ladies described as "a mother and grandmother" asked my son for is address and phone number so that they could call me when they got home — he gave them his information, and we are still waiting for that call!

The call we have been waiting for would have saved my son a lot of pain and inconvenience. Because they did not call, we could not locate the "big white dog", and after searching the Beechwood area with the help of our neighbors, my son has had to undergo rabies vaccines since the dogs bite did break the skin. Eric spent four hours in the ER to receive the first series and will continue the treatment with an additional four shots over the next 28 days. All this could have been avoided by a simple phone call to tell us if the "big white dog's" shots were up -to-date. Eric can avoid the rest of the series if the dog owner would come forward or if any one knows of this dog.

Eric, and his friend, trusted that these ladies would "do the right thing" and call when they got home. we just want the dog owner to know that it is never to late to "do the right thing" and that it is their responsibility, as a dog owner, to give us a call.

Hospital praised

TO THE EDITOR:

Add to Cohasset's many advantages: a superior town-operated ambulance service and an excellent hospital only a few miles away. The new emergency wing at the South Shore Hospital is mind boggling in the attention to detail in its layout and facilities. One of the great features is a glass-fronted private cubicle for each patient, thus greatly reducing the stressful noise of the usual large room with patients separated only by curtains. But it is the plethora of up-to-date equipment and well-trained staff that is even more important.

South Shore Hospital is no small hospital now. There are 700 medical staff members, 3800 babies born annually, as well as 74,000 emergency department admissions and 186,000 home health hospice visits in a typical year!

An example of the special care nursery service for premature or ill newborns: recently a very frail baby born at 6 months and 1 day weighing 1 lb. 10 oz. was cared for successfully ready to be sent home!

Even those anticipating continuing good health should feel better knowing that the excellent South Shore Hospital is so conveniently near. To experienced physicians, its reputation, as well as its semi-rural location, is increasingly attractive as a place to practice, relative to big-city hospitals. We benefit from their good judgment!

Insulting letter

TO THE EDITOR:

I am outraged that the Community Newspaper Company would even publish a "letter to the editor" on Cancer Link dated April 18. First of all, I want to say that it is an insult to all women who has or had breast cancer, not just young women!

I am a 33-year-old woman, who finished treatment less then a year ago for breast cancer and to read such a letter was beyond insulting.

This year we have a huge team walking for the American Cancer Society's "Relay For Life" specifically raising money for cancer research, especially breast cancer, and for a man to write to the Cohasset Mariner and state that breast cancer, in young women, can be a result of abortion I beg him to go to any oncology department or cancer center in any hospital and state his facts there, I'm sure he would wake up! Research the facts, Mr. O'Malley before you insult anymore females

Outrageous allegation

TO THE EDITOR:

With all due respect to Mr. O'Malley's disingenuous personal position on the emotionally charged issue of abortion, as a public health professional I must respond to the uninformed, unsubstantiated, unscientific and undocumented outrageous allegation of a link between abortion and breast cancer. I challenge Mr. O'Malley to produce any studies/analyses from any respected peer reviewed medical/healthcare journal that corroborates his preposterous contention.

Guided tour of Brewster Woods

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

A recent TV sound bite on an Earth Day cleanup in Cambridge reported several thousand people attended. Well, considering the relative populations of Cambridge and Cohasset, our Earth Day celebration had a good turnout. Last Saturday, about 20 people showed up at the Town Hall for their colorful Earth Day T Shirts.

To provide added interest, Meg Moore of the garden club conducted a guided tour and walk through Brewster Woods. A small group of enthusiasts left the Town Hall at 10 a.m. equipped with cleanup bags, gloves, a new guide to Brewster Woods (prepared by the Community Garden Club) and a love for the outdoors. During the leisurely two-hour tour of these beautiful woods, Meg, using the guide, explained the flora found in the woods, and how they came to be. For example, there is a lichen on some of the rock outcroppings which actually eats stone, and in turn can be eaten by hearty vegetarians. It's called rock tripe. The guide is a delightful overview of the woods, its history and its inhabitants, both present and historical

As usual, those who volunteered to participate received as much benefit doing the cleanup as the town did receiving it. The sites selected for trash pickup were Ship Cove Park in the village, and the area around the Osgood School, Beacon Rock on Government Island, parts of James Brook, some stretches on 3-A and selected trails in Great Brewster Woods.

Susan Spofford, Virginia, Jennifer, and Robin dump the debris collected from Ship Cove Park and the Osgood School grounds into Roger Hill's truck.

MacIvor Reddie murals to be replicated

Photographer Paul Camello and his assistant Brian Malloy came to take photographs of the MacIvor Reddie murals at the Paul Pratt Memorial Libraryn last week. Balanced precariously on scaffolding over the main circulation desk, Camello carefully positioned his camera, lighting equipment, and color charts to get the most accurate and complete views of the four murals depicting historical events in Cohasset. The photos will be made into transparencies, then scanned into a computer to make the final prints on canvas.

The photos will be made into transparencies, then scanned into a computer to make the final prints on canvas.

This reproduction process, a combination of standard photography and digital technology, is the ideal method for relocating the library's murals, which were painted directly on plaster and nearly impossible to remove. Well-known artist MacIver Reddie, a former resident of Cohasset, painted the murals in 1946. They show captain John Smith entering Cohasset Harbor in 1614; surveyor Joshua Fisher of Dedham parceling out land in Cohasset, then part of Hingham, in 1670; Mrs. Daniel "Resolution" Tower carting water for corn crops during a 1778 drought; and a view of Cohasset Harbor during the mid-19th century. The oil paintings were professionally cleaned in 1995 by conservators Liz Crosby and Elise Brink with funding from the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank.

Photographer Paul Camello (on platform) takes pictures of the murals in the rotunda of the library. Assisting him is Brian Malloy, lower right.

The photographically reproduced murals will be installed in the new library under construction at the site of the former Osgood school. The Friends of the Library have made this project possible, providing both the planning and the funding necessary to preserve the historic murals in this manner.

He's ba-a-a-ck!

No, not Arnie. Bill.

The 42nd president of the United States, known to interns and other ingénues as Bill Clinton, who was locked in the back room by fellow Democrats while they blew the 2000 presidential campaign, is taking the first step on the comeback trail this week.

He was scheduled to appear Wednesday at the Democrats' A Night at Harlem's legendary Apollo Theater, along with such luminaries as Cicely Tyson, Michael Jackson and Tony Bennett, to raise funds for the party's national voter registration drive.

Who knows, Bill may even treat the party faithful to a tune on his E-flat alto sax.

The Apollo —where Fidel Castro plucked chickens during his whirlwind visit to New York in 1960 — is just down the street from Bill's 14th floor office digs on West 125th Street, not far from Sylvia's soul food restaurant, for which generous taxpayers pony up $354,000 a year.

"There Goes the Neighborhood," headlined Investor's Business Daily, the day Bill moved in. Whose side do you suppose that newspaper is on?

Bill has been treated rather shabbily like that ever since Jan. 19 when he left the White House amid charges that his staff had stripped the "W" keys from the office computers, left dirty messages on the copy machines and stole towels with the presidential seal from Air Force 1.

The staff is still in denial, incidentally.

Republicans in Congress are still fussing about a last minute pardon Bill granted to financier Marc Rich, who has been on the lam in Switzerland for 17 years but whose former wife, Denise, has been pressing obscene amount of money on the Democratic party.

The Arkansas Supreme Court suspended Bill's license to practice in that state and fined him $25,000 and the U. S. Supreme Court disbarred him from appear before that court although he never had in 25 years and I don't recall him ever arguing any case in any court.

He did keep a regiment of outside barristers gainfully employed through most of his presidency, though.

Independent Counsel Robert Ray ended the $55 million investigation of Bill's affair with Monica Lewinsky after Bill acknowledged he shaded the truth a couple of times but, Ray added in a final volley, he still had enough evidence to convict him. So there!

Meanwhile, the "disgraced" former president has been going his merry way, picking up an occasional award here and there and, more important, drawing down as much as $120,000 for a single speech. He's done 200 in 30 countries which adds up to between $10 and $15 million.

Then there's that book deal for which he has taken a $12 million advance, a record for a non-fiction book, to write his memoirs for the Alfred A. Knopf publishing house. It tops the $8.5 million given to Pope John Paul II and the $8 million advanced to his wife, Senator Hillary.

And now the Democrats have finally realized that they need him more than he needs them and have asked him back. He can even bring his saxophone.

It doesn't get any better than that!

Notes from a diehard Philly sports fan

MY VIEW

EVAN SCHIFF

I rationalized it by telling myself that I'm young, energetic and a diehard Philadelphia sports fan. If there was ever a time in my life to act foolishly and overindulge myself, I thought it may as well be now.

So I did it. I bought my tickets and was well on my way to experience two playoff games, in two different sports, in two different cities in less than 24 hours.

Last weekend, I closed my eyes and when I reopened them, I was neither at my "cushy" apartment in Allston nor my office in Hingham. I was in South Philly.

It was 5 p.m. on Saturday and my father an I were dining on some delicious Italian food on the streets where Rocky Balboa used to train. The risotto was impeccable and the energy of the restaurant was overwhelming as we wolfed down the hearty meal. But there wasn't too much time to enjoy the food because we had to make the game.

Making our way down Broad Street we passed a variety of police chases and vagrants all of which we paid no attention to, because we were on a mission. We needed to get to the arena by 7 p.m. to watch the Flyers take on the Ottawa Senators in game two of their first round playoff match-up.

Let me tell you something, money may not buy happiness but it definitely buys incredible seats to sporting events. My father, the wonderful man he is, procured two seats in the Aetna Insurance suite at the arena, seats that are usually reserved for far more classy folk than myself.

For those of you who have never been in a stadium suite, I feel for you, you need to go. It boasts free drinks and free food, comfortable seating, Internet access and cable television. But its best amenity had to be the private bathroom. I felt like a king.

"I'm never standing in line for the urinal with those pedestrian fans again," my father said.

Ha ha ha, we scoffed at those less fortunate than us and reveled in our situation. We chatted it up with the other privileged fans in our box and clapped approvingly at the sweaty athletes skating on the rink below.

Even though the Flyers got thoroughly dominated in the game it didn't make any difference, as I was too stuffed from the third piece of chocolate cake I had eaten to even notice.

My father, the wonderful man he is, procured two seats in the Aetna Insurance suite at the arena, seats that are usually reserved for far more classy folk than myself.

We left the game 10 pounds heavier than when we entered and were off to the airport. I secured a room at the Holiday Inn that night because my flight was leaving at a way too early hour to even contemplate going home. I bid farewell to my dad and settled in for a solid night of sleep...

Four hours later I was awakened by the blaring sound of my phone ringing. Slamming the receiver down I stumbled out of bed at the ludicrous time of 5 a.m. But I was pumped, I was on the second leg of my Philly sports extravaganza, a Sixers/Celtics game in Boston.

I arrived in Boston at 8 a.m., just enough time to meet my buddy who was going to the game with me at a bar before the game tipped off at 12:30 p.m. Because of various distractions along with too many bars near the stadium, we didn't make it to the game until a couple of minutes had already been played in the first quarter.

As I strode up the approximate 900 flights of stairs to my seat in the last row on the top level of the stadium, these were definitely no suite seats, I could feel the wrath of the crowd. I was booed, harassed and had various kinds of snacks thrown my way. It was wonderful.

In hindsight, wearing my 76ers jersey into the FleetCenter for the first Celtics playoff game in more than seven years may not have been my most well thought out idea. But there was no way I was going to hide my allegiance.

Three hours later, when the Celtics had dismantled the my hometown team, I finally had time to reflect on my 24-hours of Philly sports.

I was obviously not too pleased with the outcome of the games. I've been to 12 playoff games before this weekend and had a Pedro-like record of 11-1 in those match-ups.

However, the thrill of being at a sports game with playoff intensity atmosphere can not be underestimated. And while in my earlier years I may have sulked for weeks making everyone around me miserable for some time, I think I'm maturing ever so slightly.

"Just enjoy the game," my buddy kept telling me when I informed him I wanted to pummel one excruciatingly annoying Celtics fan.

And you know what, I did.

Hingham ponds provide good habitat for ducks

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

Habitat refers to the particular environment where an organism lives and is most likely to be found. Although vegetation type is one of the main distinguishing features of a habitat, all parts of the environment are important for a well-functioning habitat. During the winter months, the best place to look for ducks is out on the ocean. As the pond ice melts and spring arrives, a pond habitat is the best place to look for ducks.

In honor of its 100th anniversary, Massachusetts Audubon Society published "The Nature of Massachusetts". This book describes all the various habitats in our state. One chapter is devoted to "Lakes and Ponds". You may wonder just what the difference is between a lake and a pond. Both are bodies of still water. Both contain fresh water. Most people think in a vague way of ponds being smaller, and lakes being larger. Depth is actually what defines the difference rather than surface area. "The Nature of Massachusetts" describes the difference this way: "By definition ponds are shallow enough that light can reach the entire bottom, allowing plants to grow from shore to shore; they do not 'stratify' (possess different temperature zones); and they may freeze to the bottom in winter. Lakes are deeper and therefore darker, with a portion of the bottom unable to support photosynthesis."

Although we think of ducks as being one of the main inhabitants of pond habitat, other types of birds also live near ponds. Fish, amphibians, invertebrates and plants are part of the pond community, too. Men create ponds by building dams. Beavers create ponds by building a different kind of dam. Water fills glacial depressions to form ponds.

There are two main types of ducks, dabbling and diving. Dabbling ducks tip their rear ends up in order to reach down and eat vegetation. They include Mallards, American Black Ducks, Wood Ducks, Northern Pintails and teals. Diving ducks dive under the water to swim and catch fish or collect mollusks. These include such varieties as Ring-necked Duck, Bufflehead, goldeneyes, and all three species of merganser.

The duck family includes not only ducks, but also swans and geese. Forty years ago, I never saw Mute Swans farther north than Plymouth. Now they nest on almost all the ponds in Hingham. Canada Geese, unreasonable as it seems today, at one point were considered endangered. Captive live birds made more effective decoys than wooden ones, and thus were released in order to attract more geese. An unintended result was that the non-migratory captive birds began nesting in Massachusetts instead of migrating to more northerly breeding grounds. Golf courses, playing fields, and green lawns especially when near a pond, provide excellent goose habitat. Now hunting of geese is allowed only during non-migration times, in order to encourage the migrants at the expense of the non-migratory birds.

Hingham is blessed with a number of fresh-water ponds. One of these is Triphammer Pond that was formed by damming Accord Brook in the late 1600s, thus becoming the site of a sawmill until it burned in 1823. After the fire, Benjamin Thomas built a ship chandlery and water forge. Triphammer Pond probably got its name from the huge, water-activated trip hammer installed for the manufacture of iron products, some of which were used on the USF Constitution. The entrance to this pond is by way of Pope's Lane off Leavitt Street. It is possible to walk all the way around the pond.

Foundry Pond, historically known as Thomas' Pond and also Weston's Pond, was the site of an iron works and a woolen mill. After the mills were no longer in use, the Sportsman's Club bought the pond to use for fishing. In 1961, the pond was given to the Town for conservation land. I have seen at least 16 species of ducks over the years at Foundry Pond. Hidden away, it can be found by going east on Kilby Street, then turning right into the driveway immediately after #97. This will lead you to a small parking lot that overlooks the pond.

Fulling Mill Pond is located on South Pleasant Street. It was created when Capt. Abel built a dam and a fulling mill in the 18th century. The Harts in "Not All Has Changed: A Life History of Hingham" describe fulling as "scouring and shrinking loose home-woven cloth". A shoepeg factory, which eventually burned, later replaced the fulling mill. This pond is part of our water supply and exploration of the area is no longer possible. It is possible to look for waterfowl from South Pleasant Street.

A swan ruffles its feathers in a territorial display on Hingham's Foundry Pond. Swans are part of the duck family.

The Wilder Bucket factory, which made the famous Hingham buckets, was built in 1845 on Cushing Pond where an edge-tool factory and a sawmill had been. A fire in 1902 demolished the bucket factory. Public access to the woods on the eastern side of the pond is along a footpath marked by a sign between #27 and #39. Eel River Woods abuts the western part of the pond and can be accessed across from Pioneer Road on Cushing Street. There are two wood duck houses in this area. It is unclear whether ducks have nested in them.

Accord Pond is the only pond in Hingham that was formed naturally. It is a reservoir for the water supply delivered by Massachusetts-American Water Company. According to the Harts in their history of Hingham, this pond at times has had depths at least 70 feet deep. Technically I think this would qualify it as a lake rather than a pond.

The pond near the entrance to World's End is currently fresh water. Plans are in the works to return this area to its former salt-marsh status. It will be interesting to see what changes in bird life this will bring. Pond habitats are very special environments. We are lucky to have so many nearby to enjoy!

Attic fire causes major damage

detached wood structures spread out along a meandering road and a series of cul de sacs.

Two hours after that 9-1-1 call, firefighters from three towns were still on the scene. By that time, Cohasset firefighters had sawed a hole in a section of the roof of unit 42 and pulled out insulation to check for evidence of any more fire.

Neighbors stood in the cold watching in disbelief, while others comforted the elderly couple in unit 44, one of the two units attached to unit 42 where the fire started. The owners of unit 42, Jack and Kathy Kisiel, are in Singapore on business, but their daughter Leah Kisiel lives there and was apparently at work when the fire was discovered. The owners of unit 40, the other attached unit, were also not at home.

Police Officer Christy Tarantino, who was on patrol, was dispatched to the scene after the 9-1-1 call and arrived just before the firefighters.

"I could see smoke as soon as I came around the corner," Tarantino said. "It was billowing out the eaves and windows."

Tarantino kicked in the front door to unit 42 and yelled to see if anyone was home. Then he checked all the rooms and got out of the building.

"I could see the flames from the ceiling in the bathroom, so I knew the fire was in the attic," he said.

Tarantino said the house was filling with smoke but, nevertheless went in using his "instincts."

"I've tried to go in (to fires before) and had to turn around and go right out," he said.

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said when he arrived at 9:10 a.m., and could see heavy smoke issuing from the attic louvers, he called for a second alarm right away to get additional manpower. In addition to Cohasset, engines from Scituate and Hull also responded. An engine from Hingham covered the Cohasset Fire Station.

Lincoln said the ceiling fan unit had fallen out onto the floor of the upstairs bathroom, so the firefighters could crawl through the hole with the hose.

Lincoln said he never gives dollar estimates of damage. "I leave that up to the insurance adjusters," he said.

But firefighters not only had to saw through a section of the roof, other parts of the roof were burned through. Firefighters emerging from the building were covered with black soot.

"The unit has smoke, fire and water damage," Lincoln said. "And we cut the electricity off." He said the unit was currently not habitable.

Lincoln explained the fire could have been a lot worse and have eventually spread to the other two units.

Cohasset's aerial ladder truck was fully extended, allowing firefighters access to the roof.

Lincoln said off-duty firefighter Bobby Protulis picked up the Cohasset ladder which arrived before Scituate's.

"Almost every time we use it, we put the 100 feet up," Lincoln said.

The local Red Cross chapter was also on hand.

Michael Klau, leadership volunteer with the Red Cross, was at work in Holbrook when he got the call.

Scituate firefighter Scott Dion catches his breath from a second-story window of the condo whose attic was gutted by fire Monday.

"It would have eventually broken out and with a burst of fresh air would have taken off," he said. As it turned out, firefighters had to go into the units on either side and break holes in the sheet rock to be sure the fire hadn't spread.

"We used the thermal imaging camera to detect any heat," Lincoln said.

Cohasset on-duty, off-duty and call firefighters responded to the scene. The first engine company to arrive consisted of Capt./EMT James Gurry, firefighter/EMT Francis Mahoney and firefighter/paramedic Randy Belanger.

"They did a great job attacking the fire," said Lincoln, who also praised the other Cohasset firefighters and those from neighboring towns.

"All the firefighters did a great job, and we couldn't live without the mutual aid system which worked very well," he said.

The 100-foot ladder from

"We automatically respond on two-alarm fires," he said. "We want to make sure the people have a place to stay, have clothing, and that their medical and emotional needs are being met." He said he would wait until the resident returned.

"You never know, maybe they'll just need some advice," he said.

Despite all the excitement, Tausevich, the landscaper, continued with his work fertilizing the lawns. The Mariner caught up with him a ways down the street where he was wearing his headphones and staring at the ground as the traversed the grassy side yard of a condominium unit.

"I feel badly for the woman when she comes home to that," he said "But I guess I was at the right place at the right time and I'm just glad I saved the building.

"I've seen a lot of weird things in my 25 years in the business," Tausevich said. "But this is my first fire – and hopefully my last."

To that end, Glenn Pratt of the Cemetery Study Committee, wrote to the Community Preservation Committee asking for $20,000 to restore the wrought-iron gates and for a period sign, bracket and post.

The gates, which were located at each entrance, have been evaluated by an expert and deemed to be an exceptional example of the period, Pratt said. The date of cemetery's first burial area 1737, and the later expansion in 1874 are cast into the iron.

"We believe that these fine pieces, which date back to the 1800s should be restored and reinstalled at the entrance to the cemetery," Pratt said. "It will make the cemetery look really nice."

While the gates would undoubtedly add to the appearance of the site, their restoration is outside the Cemetery Study Committee's funding. The group recently completed major expansions and renovations at Woodside and Beechwood cemeteries which cost nearly $700,000. The work included expanding the available grave space, and the repair and rebuilding of the existing infrastructure at both cemeteries.

"The completion of this work brings the town's cemeteries to a level unmatched in the area," Pratt wrote in a letter to Stuart Ivimey, the chairman of the Community Preservation Committee. "This was the first substantial work done on the properties in more than 40 years."

The Community Preservation Committee, which expects to have about $500,000 in tax surcharge fees and matching funds from the state by October, is required under the Community Preservation Act to spend 10 percent of its money on historic preservation, 10 percent on community housing, and 10 percent on open space. The remaining 70 percent can go for any of the above. The committee's first recommendations were approved at Town Meeting last month and included $100,000 to help pay for two new ball fields to be constructed at the Gravel Pits, approximately $600,000 over 15 years to be used toward the purchase of two lots off of Beach Street, and $150,000 for repairs to the historic Wilson House and Maritime Museum in the village.

Pratt said while he realizes $20,000 is a substantial amount of money, he feels it is something the Community Preservation Fund can afford.

"We just want to get the project in the pipeline early so the committee has plenty of time to look at it," Pratt said. "Even if we don't get the money from the board we won't let the idea die."

Ivimey said because the cemetery is listed as a historic landmark, it would qualify under the historic preservation portion of the act. He said the committee will take a look at all the proposals that come before them.

He said while the Cemetery Committee's submission is currently the only new one on the table, the preservation committee is working with groups who are still in the infant stages of generating ideas.

"We're working with folks to see if their ideas qualify under the act," Ivimey said. "We'll see how we can help."

The committee's recommendations must be approved at Town Meeting.

According to local historian Becky Bates-McArthur, the original section of Beechwood Cemetery was divided into six lots, one for each family group that was buried there. The cemetery has been expanded a few times over the years including in the early 1900s when it was squared off and in the 1990s when an additional section on Beechwood Street was cleared. In 1958, the Beechwood Cemetery Association turned the cemetery over to the town and each Memorial Day, Beechwood families, friends and neighbors pay homage to those who have died in war and are buried in the cemetery.

Local family takes the stage in dramatic club's 'Oliver'

However, this is his first lead role.

"I like being the lead," Wiz said. "It's a lot of responsibility but there's a lot of reward, too."Wiz, who is 13 and a seventh-grade student at Derby Academy, said sometimes it's hard to spend so much time with his family. Along with seeing them at home, he now shares the stage with them at rehearsals.

"Sometimes I don't like being around my parents so much," Wiz said, as any 13-year-old would. "But when they get on stage they're really good."

Jean Di Giacomandrea, the producer of the show, said the dramatic club encourages entire families to participate in the play.

"The club really has a sense of community and family," she said. "It's a great feel to the entire production."

Di Giacomandrea added even if the parents of the some 40 kids in the play aren't directly involved, she asks they participate in some capacity.

"They can chaperone, help with publicity, or work on the stage crew," Di Giacomandrea said. "It's a way to get families working together."

This is the first play for Betts, who persuaded her husband to get involved.

"I guess he felt that if the three us were going to be there three nights a week, he may as well be there," she said.

Betts has participated in the dramatic club in the past, running the spotlight for the last two plays.

"It looked like everyone was having so much fun on the stage, I wanted to join," she said.

One of the hardest parts for the Murrays has been the grueling practice schedule. Wiz is expected to rehearse up to three times a week, Polly needs to be on stage almost two times a week and Betts and Wiz, Sr. go when they are needed.

"It's a challenge to get everyone where they need to be when they need to be there," Betts said. "But we wouldn't do it if we didn't love the play."

The play will begin this weekend at Town Hall and will run through the middle of May. Tickets are $10 and can be bought at the door, Buttonwood Books in Cohasset, or by calling 781-544-0304. There's a $1 discount at the door for those who bring a canned food item, which will be donated to the Cohasset Food Pantry.

Deer Hill student artwork to star in special evening

Sept. 11 mosaic to be unveiled

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The biggest event at the Deer Hill School is less than a week away. The annual art exhibit dubbed, "Favorites 2002", will display the artwork of every child in the school.

Each student will pick his or her favorite piece of artwork will submit to art teacher, Ann Berman.

"I didn't want to display what I thought was their best piece," Berman said. "I tell them to pick the piece they love the most or had the most fun making."

Berman, who has been at the school since 1992, said the pieces the students pick don't necessarily correlate with what she would choose, but that's what makes the evening special.

"It's really a show that puts all the emphasis on the kids," she said.

The gala opening, slated for May 1 from 7 to 8:30 p.m., will not only display student artwork but will include refreshments and music accompaniment from Berman's husband, Jeff Wilson.

However, the highlight of the event will be the grand unveiling of a new courtyard glass mosaic, in remembrance of Sept. 11, created by Deer Hill sixth-grade students.

The mosaic features five children standing on the planet looking up at the stars, one of which has the American flag in its center. Along with the art piece there is an inscription which reads, "in memory of the victims of September 11, 2001 to remind us that we all see the same stars and that light is always stronger than darkness."

"I tell them to pick the piece they love the most or had the most fun making."
— Ann Berman, art teacher

The design was chosen by a vote of all students and faculty. Siobhan Fludder, a sixth-grade student, designed the mosaic but all the of the grade worked on bringing it to fruition.

"The kids really wanted to do something to remember the event and they wanted to make it uplifting," Berman said. "It's something they can look at with pride."

Another highlight of the night will be display of ceramic tiles that every student in the sixth grade made. The tradition was started with Berman's arrival and has been popular ever since. Each student makes a tile depicting what they remember most from their three years in the school. The events range from sporting events, to whale watching and car washes.

"It's personal to them," Berman said. "They can come back year after year and pick out which one is theirs."

Corinna Durham, a sixth-grader at Deer Hill, said she is looking forward to the event. Corinna choose a block print, a carving made from rubber, to be displayed at the art show.

"I have fun doing all of the projects but I think the block print is my best," she said. "It's neat being able to see my work displayed."

Samantha Williams, also a sixth-grader in the school, said she's thrilled to participate in the tradition of making the ceramic She plans to come back once she's at the high-school to see her work.

"It's something nice to leave behind," she said. "It's a nice tradition."

The group's experiment worked. Trying to generate publicity for its book, the Committee on Town History inserted an advertisement into the annual town warrant, which was sent to each residence in the town.

The book, "The Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III," is due out in mid-June and tells the story of the last 50 years of Cohasset.

"It gave people an easy way to order the book," said Jacqueline Dormitzer, author. "We wanted to let people know the book is almost ready."

Wigmore Pierson, chairman of the committee, said so far, the committee has received 150 orders that can be attributed to the full-page spread in the warrant. There have been almost 600 books that have been preordered.

"It's an extremely professional product we're putting out there," Pierson said. "This book should be something those who are interested in our town cherish."

The book is the third in a series of town histories. The first, authored by Victor Bigelow covers in more than 500 pages from the glacial period to the late 19th century. The second book, penned by Burtram Pratt, took more than 300 pages to cover a 50-year-period from 1900-1950.

In contrast, Dormitzer's book is going to split the difference between her two predecessors, and clocks in at about 400 pages. The dust jacket is an color photograph of an aerial shot of the town.

Also included in the book will be more than 240 photos, 50 of which will be in a center section in color, as well as two maps.

The first map depicts the existing estates in 1950 and the subdivision surrounding the large properties. The second map will show all the existing roads that were added to the town since 1950.

"Those maps are really something else," Pierson said. "They really add a lot to the book."

Pierson added the committee has been working feverishly on the book and has recently retained an International Service Book Number for the publication which means it can be ordered from anywhere on the planet. The book will also be available on amazon.com.

Currently, the committee is waiting to get the page proofs back for the publisher so it can make sure everything is OK. The group expects to get the proofs back in the next couple weeks and doesn't anticipate any problems.

"It's an immense relief to have it done," Dormitzer said. "We all have a feeling of great accomplishment."

Dormitzer said her book is stylistically different from those that were written before. She said the book is organized by decade so readers can see a progression as opposed to Bigelow's and Pratt's books, which were organized by topic.

"I tried to make it factual yet interesting at the same time," she said. "I'm very happy to have written it."

Dormitzer said received most of her historical information from old newspapers and interviews with those who lived in town in the middle part of the last century.

"It was nice to weave in a lot of the anecdotes that people had to tell," she said. "It makes the book easy to read."

The contrast between the 1950s and today was much more striking than Dormitzer, resident of Cohasset since 1967, anticipated. She said the composition of the town was made of mostly natives and was not as wealthy. However, the physically beauty of the town is one of its characteristics that has endured over time.

"The town has really retained some its tranquil flavor," she said. "It may be because people have more money now so they're able to better maintain their properties."

Workshop on master plan slated for May 4

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

While the preliminary vision statement has been written, it's time to work on its implementation.

To that end, the Growth and Development Committee will hold a public workshop on May 4 at Town Hall.

Town Planner Liz Harrington said the committee wants to start making specific recommendations on how to accomplish its goals which are detailed in the vision statement (see sidebar). She added that the more public participation the committee receives the better the master plan will be.

"We hope to get a maximum amount of feedback from these workshops," Harrington said. "It will help us to address the concerns people have."

Larissa Brown, the consultant the town has hired for the master plan process, said the first stage of the project, getting the general values of the community on paper, is complete. Now, the specifics will be discussed.

"It's a review process that provides an opportunity for the community to give its input," she said.

The master plan vision has been drafted from many meetings, neighborhood forums and a survey conducted last fall reflecting the hopes of Cohasset residents for the future.

The plan has a number of specific components to address including a goals and policy statement, land-use analysis, housing market analysis, economic development, natural and cultural resources, open space and recreation, service and facilities, and traffic/circulation/transportation.

Harrington said it is firmly grounded in Cohasset character and values as articulated today.

The draft vision will go through a process of review and refinement with all Cohasset constituents in the coming months as we work toward crafting a new long-term plan for Cohasset.

Judging by the reception the plan got at the selectmen's meeting early in the week, the discussion next weekend should be a lively one.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan took exception to the part of the vision statement concerning the control of new homes to fit their neighborhoods. He said the outcry over mansionization should subside. He added if the master plan is going to ask for site review plans every time a new house is built, the character of the town will be negatively effected.

"We've had big homes in Cohasset for a long time," he said. "You can't regulate what people's tastes are."

While the discussion about large homes was debated back and forth, selectman Ronnie McMorris said the conversation was not necessary.

"The master plan is not about mansionization," she said. "It's about developing a consensus and it's not driven by a special interest group, the entire town has had an opportunity for input."

Selectman Fred Koed agreed.

"This process is about figuring out what we want the town to be like for the next 40 years," he said.

Larissa Brown said the site review plan was only one idea and she was neither advocating nor opposing the option.

"I'm not in the business of prescribing what the town should do," Brown said. "I'm just providing the tools for the town to come to a consensus and implement a plan."

The workshop will take place on May 4 at Town Hall and will last from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m.

Master plan vision statement

Historic buildings and sites have been preserved for future generations.

New or expanded homes are appropriate to the context of their neighborhood and surrounding natural setting and resources.

The town continues to provide and excellent education for its young people.

Housing is available for households with a range of incomes, as well as for senior citizens and town employees.

Route 3A businesses contribute both to the attractiveness and the tax base of Cohasset, through sensitive landscape, appropriate building and parking design and effective traffic management.

Prudent and cost-effective town management provides quality town services while maintaining reasonably stable taxes.

Numerous organizations, activities and events celebrate the historic and cultural heritage of Cohasset.

Keeping Cohasset just the way it is Master Plan will help, officials say

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The closest thing Cohasset will have to a crystal ball is the Master Plan, Planning Board member Peter Pratt told the Zoning Board of Appeals this week.

Pratt, who also sits on the Growth and Development Committee, which is spearheading the Master Plan process, laid out an ambitious timetable before ZBA members to put them in the picture, so to speak, about what lies ahead.

"If we get it right, the Master Plan will become a living document."
— Peter Pratt

At 1 p.m., Saturday, May 4 a workshop is planned during which smaller groups will break out into "working groups" to brainstorm about housing, fiscal policy and other issues, Pratt explained.

Pratt said plans are to have the final draft of the Master Plan ready by the fall special Town Meeting with any proposed bylaw changes on board for the spring annual Town Meeting.

He explained the Master Plan will focus on land-use policy but can also include transportation issues and harbor development, for example.

"If we get it right, the Master Plan will become a living document," he said. "One that can be routinely revisited and updated."

ZBA member Ben Lacy worried that a Master Plan might do harm. He pointed out the Town Common, which might need some sidewalk repair, but is otherwise nearly perfect.

Lacy's reaction was to "keep your hands off it."

But other ZBA members said a Master Plan might be the best way to keep Cohasset just the way it is.

"If you like it the way it is, start protecting it," Barbara Power said.

Mark Dunne said the town would be in a better position to "steer the ship" if it had a plan.

ZBA members were in agreement the Master Plan should address the need for affordable housing in town for both senior citizens and younger families.

Lacy said the town needs to appoint an affordable housing committee to focus on the issue.

The Beechwood Church was dedicated in 1867.

Beechwood Church anchors neighborhood

The second of a two-part article about the Beechwood section of Cohasset

By Rebecca Bates-McArthur
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

In 1858, Mrs. Clarissa Harris felt there was a need for a church in the neighborhood. The Beechwood Evangelical Union Society met on the second floor of Brown's General Store in 1863 and the church formed. In 1866, the cornerstone was laid.

At the dedication service on Jan. 15, 1867, Mr. Charles Bailey of Scituate suggested the mortgage be retired. A collection was taken and the money needed was raised.

In 1948, the original steeple was hit by lightning, and it was taken down and replaced with a smaller one. The parsonage, which had been purchased in 1870, was sold in 1957 to help finance a new kitchen, furnace room, parlor and minister's study.

The church is still active and known for its Harvest and Election suppers.

The E.H. Brown General Store and post office was the hub of Beechwood. Mail was addressed to a post office at The Beechwoods. The Brown family ran the store for close to 100 years. On the second floor, there was a meeting room, known as Eagle Hall. It was possible to buy groceries, flour, shoes, hardware goods, grain and feed, gasoline and the children's favorite penny candy. Other small stores along Beechwood Street and Doane Street included a gas station, a blacksmith's shop and a clothing factory. The Beechwood post office was closed after World War II.

The church is still active and known for its Harvest and Election suppers.

The first fire station in Beechwood was located at the edge of the Cemetery on Doane Street. The building housed horse-drawn equipment. In 1902, the station building was moved to Beechwood Street where the basketball court is now located. Cohasset Engine 3 was housed here. Three permanent fire fighters and volunteers manned the Beechwood Fire Company. As the truck headed to the fire, it would pick up the firemen. The station was closed in 1981 in a move to centralize the equipment. The building was sold and was moved to Clapp Road in Scituate. The fire bell is now to be found in the Maritime Museum.

The Beechwood Improvement Association Hall was built in 1912-13. The purpose of the association was to "cultivate fraternal relations among the members, to encourage every social, moral and intellectual influence for the improvement of our community." The hall was used for many social events, including dances, basketball, Sunday school and minstrel shows. A baseball team was formed. The Cohasset Grange, founded in 1939, also met there. In 1916, members of the association started a library. When the library needed more space, an addition was built. The Paul Pratt Memorial Library rented this space and the Beechwood branch of the library was created. In 1961, the library branch was closed and its books moved to the current library building. The librarian's position was retained. In 1978, the association met for the last time and established a trust fund to be administered by the Cohasset Recreation Department for the perpetual benefit of the youth (14 and under) from the Beechwood neighborhood. Only the interest can be spent for the recreational, physical and/or emotional advancement of the young people. Permission must be obtained by residents of the neighborhood before it can be used. The hall was sold to a private owner.

The Beechwood section of Cohasset has seen much growth in current years. Many farms prospered in this area of town in the early 1900s. In 1978, the new Cohasset Reservoir was built at the end of Beechwood Street on land originally farmed, then taken over by the government during World War II. As the town has grown and turned away from being a quiet, rural village, land has been sold and houses built. Cohasset has changed over the years, Beechwood seeing much of it.

Who says girls lacrosse isn't as physical; as the boys game? Cohasset's Julie Lordan (left) does her best to shake off...coverage of Norwell defender in Tuesday's tough 9-5 loss.

Lady Laxers lose tough one

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The girls lacrosse team fell this past Tuesday, losing to a fast-passing Norwell team, 9-5. With their record dropping to 2-2, the Lady Skippers hope to get back to full strength this week and prepare for upcoming league matches.

"They were a little better than us moving the ball around," admitted first year lacrosse coach Torin Sweeney.

This was only the first glimpse Cohasset has had at smaller Pilgrim Conference competition this spring, as they opened the season with Marshfield, New Bedford and Barnstable.

Senior captain Kristin Sheerin maintained her quota of multiple goals, pitching in two while adding another assist. Despite facing consistent double and triple teams by tenacious opposing defenders, Sheerin continues to put up impressive numbers.

"She is definitely one of the better players in the area," lauded Sweeney, who has turned Sheerin into the lacrosse equivalent of a basketball point guard. "The other teams really chase her down. But she is learning to expect it now, and she will find ways to get around it."

Junior Sera Genovese, back in the line-up after an injury sidelined her the first month of the season, poured in two goals from the attacker position. A 25-goal scorer last year, Genovese has worked out lightly with the team, and may have earned herself a starting position with her effort Tuesday.

"She gives us a little more experience up front," noted the coach, "and another person to rotate in."

Junior Maura McKenney, currently second on the team in scoring behind Sheerin, recorded Cohasset's fifth goal of the day.

McKenney is one of several teammates who played the entire game on Tuesday, including fellow forward Sheerin. On defense, junior Katherine Coyne and Julie Lordan almost never see bench time, and senior forward Carlie Carter is nearly at the point in her surgery recovery where she can do the same.

For now, Sweeney does have several rotation options for his zone defense to give any one of Carter, Coyne, and Lordan a

Stung by perfection

Abington's Hillyer quiets Skippers bats in historic performance

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

After watching a performance the like of C.J. Hillyer's perfect game on Tuesday, there's not much an opposing coach can do but tip his cap.

"The kid pitched a gem," lauded Cohasset head baseball coach Bob Knurek. "He fell behind one hitter all game. His command was great, and he had some nice play in the field behind him. My hat's off to him."

The sophomore southpaw struck out 13 Skipper hitters in all. Of the remaining nine outs in the consecutive string of 21, three or four could have been hits if they'd traveled a few more inches one way or the other, accordign to Knurek.

The Straughn brothers, senior Tim and freshman Ted, came the closest to breaking up Hillyer's history-making performance, each driving long flies that were run down. Tim's by right fielder Bob Lacerda and Ted's by center fielder Mike Miller.

"I've had great defense behind me all year, and I had a few guys who really came up big for me today," said Hillyer, who is now 3-1 on the season.

The Abington star hurler relied heavily on his changeup to keep Cohasset hitters off balance all afternoon, mixing it in deftly with his fastball and curve.

"I had a lot of confidence in my change," said Hillyer, who also has a Little League no-hitter on his resume. "It was working well for me, so I kept going to it."

Overshadowed by this historic performance, sadly, was the first varsity start of the younger Straughn. Freshman Tim went six strong innings himself, striking out eight of the hitters in first place Abington's impressive batting order, while surrendering just six hits. Only three of the host Green Wave's runs were earned.

After being victimized early by a four-run, three-hit inning, Knurek was impressed by the way the frosh hurler settled down to finish the game strong.

"Tim showed a lot for a freshman, especially with his poise," praised the veteran coach.

With the loss, the Skippers fell to 2-4, but 0-4 in South Shore League play.

"There's good baseball in the South Shore League," said Knurek. "We're the smallest school in the league, so it's not always easy to compete. But it's good competition. I like the challenge and I think the kids do too."

The Skippers were slated to put their perfect 2-0 non-league record on the line yesterday with Nantucket coming to town and number two hurler Mike Snowdale on the mound.

Number one starter Tim Straughn was scheduled to get the start this afternoon at home against Carver (3:30 start at Milliken Field).

Tennis team hands Abington first loss of season, 5-0

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After a shaky start put the Cohasset girls tennis program in a quick 0-2 hole, they seem to have regrouped, and are now looking like the playoff bound team everyone knows them to be.

With more than 10 days between matches due to April break, the Lady Skippers finally ran their record past the .500 mark, tearing down SSL rival Abington, 5-0. This was the third consecutive South Shore League win for the Cohasset girls, as they improved to 3-2, 3-1 in league.

"That was exactly what we needed right after vacation," noted 11th year coach Sarah Meehan. "But (Abington) had a good little team. They have done a lot to build up their program."

At first singles, junior captain Lindsay Grossman showed no signs of rust, playing her first match in over two weeks, beating Abington senior Katie Bitangelo, 6-1, 6-0. Grossman found herself able to pick apart the speedy Bitangelo with her powerful ground strokes.

"Lindsay was just in top form,"

Cohasset freshman phenom Elizabeth Stone has yet to lose even a single game in four singles matches this season, clearly living up to high preseason expectations.

All-Scholastic hockey team

Cohasset's O'Connell, Devine and Straughn headline nine Skippers named among area's elite

We saved the biggest and, dare we say, the toughest for last.

Hockey players are, in general, among the more difficult athletes to evaluate. Unlike basketball, wrestling, track and gymnastics, stats and numbers often do not tell much of the story on the ice.

In hockey, so much more so than these other winter sports, evaluators such as us have to rely heavily on what we see. This is why the feedback from area coaches was so vital in this team's selection process. We asked our coaches to comment not only on their own players, but opposing players they'd observed over the course of this past season. All of the players you see here who made our team were recommended for the honor by multiple coaches.

Hockey is also one of the more consummate team sports, with proficiency from many players in many distinct phases of the game being essential to overall success. This is why this is the biggest of our all-scholastic teams. We've done our best with our 21 choices here — eight forwards, six defensemen and four goalies — to honor all of the vital elements that translate into success on the ice.

As the phenomenal campaigns turned in by many of the teams in our circulation area might suggest, we had a bumper crop of players from which to choose. Several of the players you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" were near misses for this honor.

There were five or six players from the Cohasset High team alone we hated to pass over. There was so much quality depth and offensive explosiveness on this unbeaten team (19-0-1) that it became all but impossible to choose between talented scorers such as John Durkin, Tom Anderson, Rob Carpenter and Matt Davis. Fortunately, all four of these Cohasset's Greg O'Connell was the top scorer in Marinerland this winter with 62 points, making him a lock for our all-scholastic team.

Weber 'saves' day

Senior goalie immense, as laxers squeeze by Franklin, 5-4

Senior all-conference goalie Kyle Weber stood tall in the fourth quarter, and his 17 second-half saves led Cohasset to their sixth win of the season.

The Skippers squandered a 5-1 lead at the end of the third period, but managed to hang on and defeat Hockomock League member Franklin, a second-year varsity that proved far more difficult than expected.

"Something's missing in our approach to games like this," said Head Coach Kevin Orcutt. "We can't seem to understand that there's a bulls-eye on our jerseys for every opponent, after what we accomplished last year. Maybe we believe all we have to do is show up, but if that's the case, we're in for a long second half of this season."

Cohasset's attack — missing senior co-captains Eric Libby (vacation) and Paul Previte (an arm injury that will sideline him for two-to-three weeks) – never seemed to get in synch. Senior Jason Moore and junior Curt Kahn scored twice and once, respectively, but worked together effectively only sporadically. The third attackman, junior Matt Davis, normally a midfielder, had one assist.

"If we think we're going to win games getting three goals from our attack," said Orcutt, "then we're delusional. They are going to have to step up, and with Hingham on Friday, they're gonna have to do it very, very soon."

Weber, coming off a shaky performance against Falmouth and not seeing much action versus Canton, was immense. In the fourth quarter alone, he stopped a half dozen point-blank shots, and ran the clears with the confidence players are underclassmen and will almost certainly be high on our all-scholastic consideration list next spring.

In the end, we limited ourselves to a 21-player roster, so difficult choices had to be made. Without further ado, here are those choices:

Greg O'Connell

The South Shore League's leading scorer this season with 62 points in 22 games, including two goals and an assist in the post-season (having a hand in three of the Skippers' four playoff tallies)...tops on the team in both goals (29) and assists (33)...a two-time South Shore League all-star...an excellent skater with a great burst and a fearless attitude...also a scintillating passer, as witnessed by the 33 assists, which was more than twice as many as all but one teammate... Patriot Ledger all-scholastic...also a SSL all-star and Mariner All-Scholastic for soccer....plays soccer year round as member of the South Shore Blazers...will transfer to Belmont Hill preparatory school next fall, where he will play soccer and hockey in the hopes of drawing more college recruiting interest...the son of former Bruins player and current team General Manager Mike O'Connell...Cohasset hockey coach Dennis Walsh: "You could see he had the skating and stick handling and shooting ability since his freshman year, but he really became a much more complete and mature player this year. His passing has really improved. He's seeing the whole ice now. It's Greg's great attitude that really sets him apart. No matter what you ask him to do or what line you put him on, he never complains. He's almost always one of the first kids on the ice for practice and he's definitely one of the hardest workers out there shift after shift."

Tim Straughn - Senior Defenseman - Cohasset

Tim Straughn

Had an amazing +/- rating of +69 this season, which we're guessing might have been tops in all of Massachussets, if not New England... finished fifth on the high flying Skippers in scoring with 10 goals and 13 assists, one ahead of freshman brother Ted (11-11—22)...a major part of the defensive core that allowed just 19 goals in 20 regular season games for the unbeaten Skippers (19-0-1)...possesses the whole package: size, willingness to play physical, skating ability and great shot...South Shore League all-star...Patriot Ledger all-scholastic...played a lot of off-season hockey between his junior and senior year, and it showed dramatically...also an outstanding baseball player who has actually had more conversations with college coaches for that sport than hockey...led the C.H.S. baseball team in hitting (.426 batting average), RBI and pitching (2.56 ERA, 27 strikeouts in 28 innings) last season...also plays catcher...an honor roll student...among the colleges he's looking at are UMass-Amherst, Holy Cross, St. Anselm, Merrimack and Northeastern... Cohasset hockey coach Dennis Walsh: "Tim has been a good solid player since I got him, but he really seemed to come in with a lot of confidence this season, and that let him show what he's capable of, which is quite a bit. I could see Tim playing at the college level. If he hung in there, he'd eventually get used to the faster game in college. Let's face it, there aren't too many kids his size who can skate that well."

Mike Devine - Sophomore Defenseman - Cohasset

Mike Devine

Recipient of the Skippers "Unsung Hero" award the last two years...contributed 15 points (five goals, 10 assists) this season even though he was clearly a defense-first blue liner...a major part of the defensive core that allowed just 19 goals in 20 regular season games for the unbeaten Skippers (19-0-1)...played with several defensive partners this season, which forced him to adjust quite a bit and often left him carrying the bulk of the load...played with an intelligence and steadiness that belied his years... also plays lacrosse at C.H.S...plays hockey year round as a member of the Bay State Sharks in the Metropolitan Boston League...also loves golf, but couldn't play for the high school team this year because of hockey conflicts... Cohasset hockey coach Dennis Walsh: "He's a talented player, but the thing that I appreciated most was just how steady he was. He wasn't always flashy and sometimes you wouldn't notice all the little things he did. He just had a sense for making the right move and doing the right thing."

Pat Bowen - Sophomore Defenseman - Marshfield

Pat Bowen

A three-year varsity player, Bowen established himself as one of the best defensemen in the Old Colony League...A two-time league All-star (ACL and OCL). Bowen scored 31 points this season on 17 goals and 14 assists for Marshfield (15-6-3), which finished second in its first OCL season...These numbers were the highest amongst OCL defensemen and placed him sixth overall...In three years, Bowen has racked up 56 career points...An honor roll student at MHS, Bowen's defensive work on the back line helped the Rams notch a season, which ended in the semifinals of the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney...The sophomore was the MVP at last summer's Hockey Night tourney...An Honorable Mention to the Mariner All-Scholastic team last year, Bowen was a laborless pick for the squad this time around...Bowen will be among Marshfield's top returning players next season. Marshfield coach Dan Connolly: "Pat is one of the best defenseman on the South Shore, if not the state. He has a great work ethic and passion for the game. He is always working to become a better and more complete player."

Pete Wilson - Sophomore Forward - Marshfield

Pete Wilson

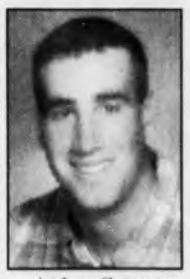
A two-year varsity player, Wilson emerged as the best offensive player in the Old Colony League... Led both the Marshfield team and the OCL in scoring, racking up 45 points on 18 goals, 27 assists...In his two-year career, Wilson has amassed 65 points...Always able to rise to the occasion when needed most, Wilson scored his first career hat trick and also had an assist in the Rams' win over Stoughton in the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney...Voted as the Marshfield (15-6-3) team's MVP, Wilson was also an OCL All-star...This is Wilson's first appearance on a Mariner All-Scholastic team...A top returnee to next year's squad, Wilson also plays baseball at MHS. Marshfield coach Dan Connolly: "Pete is a pleasure to coach and always gives 100 percent in practice and games, and in striving to become better. He is always the first one on the ice and the last to leave. He is a very dedicated player."

Dana Unangst - Junior Forward - Marshfield

Dana Unangst

A two-year varsity player, Unangst was among the team's top scorers with 29 points on 8 goals and 21 assists... With his 12 total points from last season, Unangst has amassed 41 points in his career...A highly versatile player, Unangst was similar to a utility man for Marshfield, which finished second in its first season in the Old Colony League...Unangst was primarily a left wing, but would switch to defense on power plays and when the Rams were killing penalties...His many roles on the team this year were instrumental in Marshfield's Div. 2 South Sectional tourney run, which was halted in the semifinals...An OCL All-star, Unangst will return as a captain on next season's Marshfield hockey squad...The junior also plays soccer for MHS. Marshfield coach Dan Connolly: "Dana is one of the strongest and fastest players around. He always came up with the big play whenever we needed it."

Andrew Genovese - Senior (Capt.) Center - Hingham



Andrew Genovese

Was the Patriot League champion Harbormen's leading scorer this season with 40 points on 20 goals and 20 assists...His work on the frontline helped Hingham (24-3-1) advance to the semifinals of the Super Eight (Div. 1A) tourney, which was the team's first-ever appearance...A two-year recipient of the Harbormen's Most Valuable Player award, Genovese was a key member of last year's Div. 1 State Championship team...A powerful skater with great hands, Genovese scored one of two goals in the team's 2-0 Super Eight win over top-ranked St. John's Shrewsbury – the same team Hingham defeated for the state title a year ago...A Patriot League All-star, Genovese also plays baseball at HHS and is a coach in the Hingham Youth Hockey program...The captain was a member of the Massachusetts team that recently competed in the Chicago Showcase, in which only the nation's best high school players compete...Genovese plans to attend college and continue his hockey career. Hingham coach Garrett Reagan: "Andrew is a strong kid. He's very strong at the corners and in front of the net. He's a good playmaker, one of the tops on the team. He's scored some big goals last year and this year."

Jed McDonald - Junior Defenseman - Hingham

An Honorable Mention to the All-Scholastic squad last season, McDonald is making his first appearance on our team after a solid season for the Patriot League champion Harbormen (24-3-1)...Is a two-year selection for the Hingham team's defensive MVP award despite being just a junior...A highly-skilled defenseman, McDonald was also a force for the Harbormen on the frontline, racking up 29 points on 14 goals and 15 assists this season...A Patriot League All-star, his performance on the ice this year was instrumental in Hingham's first-ever Super Eight tourney run, in which the team finished third to hockey heavyweights Catholic Memorial and champ BC High...Scored a goal and two assists in Hingham's win over Billerica in the Super Eight...McDonald also scored the game-winning goal one year ago in Hingham's Div. 1 State Championship win over St. John's Shrewsbury, whom the Harbormen also defeated in Super Eight action this year...The junior joined teammates Andrew Genovese and Mike Boles on the Massachusetts team at the Chicago Showcase, which features the best high school hockey talent in the nation...McDonald will return next season as a captain on the Hingham squad. Hingham coach Garrett Reagan: "He's come up with some extremely big goals the last two seasons, particularly in the tournaments. He was moved to defense last year and has improved by leaps and bounds. He's an excellent skater and is a good position player. He's a big strong kid, too, which makes things easier."

Mike Boles - Senior (Capt.) Forward - Hingham

Mike Boles

Was a force in front of the net for the Patriot League champion Harbormen (24-3-1)... Boles was among the team's top scorers, racking up 28 points on 12 goals and 16 assists...His performance on offense this season helped Hingham advance to the semifinals of its first ever Super Eight appearance, just one game shy of the title contest...Boles came up big for Hingham on several occasions this season, particularly in the Super Eight tourney, in which he scored two goals in an 8-6 win over rival Billerica...Boles recently played on the Massachusetts team in the Chicago Showcase, a national high school hockey tourney featuring the top talent in the country...Boles is considering attending college and hopes to continue his hockey career. Hingham coach Garrett Reagan: "He's very fast and is a very hard worker. He can dish out a big hit and uses his speed well. He's a very consistent player and was a good leader."

Kevin Olson - Senior (Capt.) Forward - Hingham

Mike McNulty

For the last two seasons, Olson has been among the Patriot League champion Harbormen's leaders in assists...This year, Olson racked up 20 assists (tying fellow All-Scholastic Andrew Genovese for the team lead) and added 11 goals for a total 31 points...A Patriot League All-star, Olson was instrumental in Hingham's first-ever appearance in the Super Eight tournament, in which the Harbormen (24-3-1) finished third...Olson had a great tournament this season, racking up three assists in the team's 4-0 win over Reading...Olson is making his second-consecutive appearance on the Mariner All-Scholastic hockey squad...A captain this year, Olson would have competed in the Chicago Showcase had he not sustained a late-season injury...Olson plans to attend prep school, where he will continue his hockey career. Hingham coach Garrett Reagan: "He's one of the hardest working kids we've ever had on the ice. He's very fast and is a very smart player. He's a very consistent player in that he works hard on the ice all the time."

Mike McNulty - Senior (Capt.) Center - Hanover

A four-year varsity player and starter for the Indians, McNulty was the team's leading scorer with 35 points on 20 goals and 15 assists...McNulty also led the Hanover hockey team in scoring last season helping the Indians attain a Div. 3 State Championship title and undefeated season...The senior finished his career with more than 100 points...Big, strong, and powerful, McNulty's impact on the frontline was hard for opponents to deal with...The captain was always on Hanover's power plays...A Patriot League All-star, McNulty is making his second consecutive appearance on the Mariner All-Scholastic hockey squad...McNulty is considering attending Suffolk University, where he plans to continue his hockey career. Hanover coach Jim Sylvia: "Mike didn't have the numbers he wanted because a lot of our opponents were all over him this year. He's a hard worker, big kid, and a good skater. He has all the attributes. He was the leader of our team for the past two years. I can't say enough about him."

Ryan Carr - Senior (Capt.) Defenseman - Hanover

Ryan Carr

After the graduation losses of Hanover's talented defensive back line, it was Carr's job to take the reigns... A solid defenseman with impressive skills, Carr kept Hanover on track in the first half of the season before suffering a injury midway through the year in a game against Scituate...Despite missing the latter half of the season, Carr was still voted a Patriot League All-star by the league's coaches...In addition to his stellar defensive play, Carr was also called upon by the Indians in the offensive ice, acting as a fourth forward and he had the speed to do it...This is Carr's first appearance on a Mariner All-Scholastic team...Carr is a member of the HHS Student Council and is the chairman of the School Relations Club...Carr has not yet decided on future plans, but is certain that hockey is in them, whether in college, prep school, or playing with a Jr. Hockey organization. Hanover coach Jim Sylvia: "This was Ryan's year to shine and he did while he was there. It's just too bad his season was cut short. He was our one premier defenseman and a great leader. He also had a great shot and could get into the pack and up with the play."

John Lynch - Senior Goalie - Hingham

John Lynch

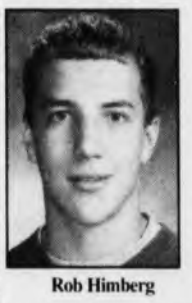
Was a no-brainer for a spot on the Mariner All-Scholastic squad this year... Established himself as one of the top goalies in the state by posting a nearly untouchable 1.06 goals against average despite Hingham's highly difficult schedule...His performance between the pipes helped the Harbormen (24-3-1) easily claim the Patriot League title and led them to the Super Eight Tourney (MIAA Div.1A)...There, he posted two shutouts against Reading (4-0) and top-seeded St. John's (2-0) – a game in which he stopped a potentially hazardous penalty shot – helping Hingham advance to the semifinals (top three teams)...He was the only goalie in the Super Eight to record shutouts...Has had two solid seasons in the net for Hingham, which won the Div. 1 state title a year ago...A Patriot League All-star, Lynch also plays for the HHS lacrosse team and was a member of last season's Div. 2 state championship team...Lynch is undecided regarding future plans, but would like to attend college and major in communications and film production. Hingham coach Garrett Reagan: "He's been a big game goalie the last two seasons he's started and has played terrific in the tournaments. He's tall, so he's able to cover a lot of the net. He's worked hard for all his accomplishments."

Kenny O'Sullivan - Junior Goalie - Abington/EB

Kenny O'Sullivan

A two-time South Shore League All-star, O'Sullivan had a great year between the pipes for Abington/EB... An Abington resident, O'Sullivan's solid play helped lead the Green Wave to the semifinals of the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney, where they fell to eventual champ Blue Hills...Recorded five shutouts during the year, including a 5-0 blanking in Ab/EB's first round tourney win over Diman...A three-year starter on the Green Wave hockey squad, O'Sullivan's performance in goal this season helped Ab/EB (13-6-3) notch a solid third-place finish in the SSL...Still a junior, O'Sullivan will be back in the net next season and has already been elected a captain...O'Sullivan also plays soccer for AHS in the fall. Abington/EB coach Tony Sulmonte on O'Sullivan's tourney performance: "Kenny kept us in the game. You felt that he was going to keep us in the game for the rest of the way. If he did not make those saves, it would have been lights out."

Rob Himberg - Senior (Capt.) Center - Norwell



Rob Himberg

Norwell High's all-time leading scorer with 196 points, including this season's total of 58 (29 goals and 29 assists) in 21 games...A slick playmaker and even slicker skater...was rarely off the ice in special teams situations (short handed and power play)... three-time SSL All-Star... Patriot Ledger all-scholastic...also plays high school golf and baseball...intends to attend Winchendon Academy prep school for a year in the hopes of drawing more collegiate interest...scored three goals and added an assist in heartbreaking 7-6 loss to Somerset in the first round of the state tourney...Norwell hockey coach Paul Hurley: "Players with Robbie's offensive talent just don't come along too often. We rode him for all he was worth, and we're probably going to need a lot of guys stepping up big to fill the void he'll leave."

Ben Spitz - Senior (Capt.) Defenseman - Norwell

Arguably, the South Shore League's best defenseman for the last two years, and some would say longer... the four-time league all-star tallied 32 points this season (13 goals, 19 assists) despite being a purported "defense first" blue liner...though minute totals aren't kept, it's a fair bet to say Spitz lapped the SSL field in that statistical category... Patriot Ledger all-scholastic...was on the ice for power plays, penalty kills and probably close to two-thirds of the rest of the time—not bad considering hockey is his second favorite sport...Ben distinguished himself as the state's top high school golfer by winning the state individual tourney in both his sophomore and junior years. Unfortunately, he couldn't participate in this past fall's tourney due to a thumb injury...was recruited by dozens of colleges with top Div. 1 golf programs before accepting a full four-year scholarship to Texas Christian University, a top 10 nationally ranked program...Norwell hockey coach Paul Hurley: "Imagine how good Ben would be if hockey wasn't just his hobby. I can't say enough about how much I appreciate him coming back to play after he got his scholarship. With the risk of injury in hockey, I figure a lot of kids would've forgotten about the game. But he came back, and you could tell by the way he played that he never even thought about injuries."

Ben Spitz

Mike McAteer - Junior Forward - Norwell

Mike McAteer

Mike finished fifth in the South Shore League scoring race this season (18 goals-17 assists—35 points), and second on the Clippers behind senior Rob Himberg... also scored two goals in the heartbreaking 7-6 first round tourney loss to Somerset...unanimous SSL all-star...will be looked to for even bigger things next season as Himberg, and the next two leading scorers from this year's team behind him (Ben Spitz and Brendan MacDonald) are being lost to graduation...was rarely off the ice in special teams situations...an extremely flashy skater with a good set of hands, but he'll have to create his own offense a little more next season without the extraordinary playmaking of Himberg and Spitz...plays hockey year round and would like to play at the college level...is planning to play in several showcases over the next few months for college and Junior hockey coaches...also plans to play in the Hockey Night in Boston showcase league this summer...Norwell coach Paul Hurley: "Mike can really skate, and he worked well with our first line. He was also big on the power play and shorthanded. He definitely became a more complete player this year. He'll have an even bigger challenge next year, though, because other teams will be keying on him."

Joe Duggan - Junior Goalie - Scituate

Joe Duggan

Awarded Scituate team's Most Valuable Player award... stopped more than 90 percent of the 718 shots thrown at him this year in 21 games (an average of more than 34 per), playing against what many believed was the toughest game-in, game-out competition of any Div. 3 team in the state, the Patriot League schedule alone pitting the Sailors twice each against two higher division 2001 state champs (Hanover and Hingham) and a 2000 state champ (Duxbury)...playing in front of a young and inexperienced defensive core, Duggan's play in net was clearly the biggest key to the Sailors push to qualify for the state tourney...also the starting second baseman for the S.H.S. baseball team...the fifth of five Duggan bothers to be a standout in hockey and baseball at Scituate high...brother Tim (now at Bryant College) was a Mariner all-scholastic for both baseball and hockey last year, and was also named the hockey team's MVP...Peter graduated from S.H.S. in '95, Kevin in '97 and Bryan in '99...hasn't thought much about college yet, but is leaning toward a career in Criminal Justice...Scituate hockey Coach Mike Breen: "Joe kept us in so many games this season we probably had no business competing in. If he does that same thing next season, with the other talent we have coming back, I can see us being a lot better."

Matt Hall - Junior Forward - Scituate

Matt Hall

A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic selection, Hall proved a huge presence both offensively and defensively for the Sailors this past season, helping to keep them respectable in the ultra-competitive Patriot League and earn them a berth in the Div. 3 state tourney…led the team in ice time, playing frequently on both the power play and in shorthanded situations…also generally saw a couple of shifts per game on defense, as the Sailors were hit hard by graduation on the blue line in 2001 and had several injuries there this season…a tall, rangy player who's very strong on his skates, and has a blistering shot…tied for the team lead in scoring with 20 points (with Honorable Mention selectee Kyle Simpson), including a team best 11 goals…plays hockey year round as a member of the South Shore Dynamos, and has also played in the CDL (College Development League)…would like to play college hockey and has arranged to play in a couple of elite showcases this summer…also a starter for the S.H.S baseball team…Scituate coach Mike Breen: "Matt is just a gifted all around athlete. He has the ability to do a lot of good things on the ice. He could really help make us a different team next year if he can put it all together."

Ryan Flaherty - Senior Forward - Silver Lake

Ryan Flaherty

This B.C. High transfer emerged over the second half of the season after being moved from a second line wing to top line center, as he scored the bulk of his team-best 23 points (12 goals, 11 assists) in the second half of the season… this re-shuffling also played a big hand in the Lakers going 8-4-4 down the stretch after a 1-4-1 start….proved an extremely adept center, doing a nice job both carrying the puck and setting up his wingers… transferred to Silver Lake after his sophomore year, but played Junior hockey last winter as a junior for the Bay State Breakers rather than high school hockey…coach Bill Donovan admitted that it took him a while to recognize all this first year player for his program offered…Old Colony League all-star…also a current member of the varsity baseball team…his college possibilities include Norwich, Framingham State and Tampa University, and he'd like to continue playing hockey or baseball at the next level…Silver Lake coach Bill Donovan: "Ryan was a real steady two-way player. He was a strong competitor and always had a real positive attitude. He hit the ground running when I moved him in the middle with two speedy wings, and that really sparked our offense, which up until that point had really been struggling."

Bob Malone - Senior Goalie - Silver Lake

Bob Malone

Bided his time for two years as a backup to two-time Old Colony League all-star goalie Buddy Johnson ('01), a Mariner all-scholastic last spring, but took full advantage of his opportunity once he got it, earning an OCL all-star berth for himself…played like a battle tested veteran right from the start of this season… posted a goals against average of 1.90 and saved over 90 percent of the shots on him… Brockton Enterprise All-Scholastic… plays catcher and first base for the Silver Lake baseball team…has a grade point average of 3.5…will attend UMass-Amherst next year…Silver Lake coach Bill Donovan: "Bobby kept us in so many games this season. He made the saves we needed him too, and quite a few others he had no business saving. The best thing, though, was his consistency. He never had a letdown, which is something you really appreciate at the high school level. Bobby's just a great kid. He was never the one to point fingers at others. He was always real supportive of his teammates, and a great leader. The players in front of him really wanted to do their best. He helped keep things on an even keel on the ice."

breather. Senior Maggie O'Neill, junior Nell Brewer, and sophomores Libby Meikleham and Ashley Faber have all proved themselves to be strong candidates to fill the role.

Sweeney's hope is that he can get fresher players on the field at all times, trying to establish a quicker transition game. Against New Bedford, Cohasset got beat consistently by quick outlet passes from the defense.

"We definitely improved at [transitioning] against New Bedford, but that is still something we need to work on," observed Sweeney.

Behind the defense, junior goalie Gia Petrakis continues to give her team rock solid performances in net, averaging over 13 saves a game this year.

She recorded her 500th career save in game one of the season against Marshfield.

Several times this year and last year, Petrakis has worked one-on-one with Terry Kahn, a wizened local lacrosse coach. She has also attended a few camps to hone her skills for this season.

"Her experience is huge for us," Sweeney said of his the third year starter in net. "She just has a presence back there where the girls all have confidence in her."

reported Meehan. "She'll have a nice time cruising through some more of these matches."

Freshman Elizabeth Stone continued to dominate her position at second singles, winning easily, 6-0, 6-0. She has not given up so much as a game in four matches this year, clearly living up to the high preseason expectations the team had for her.

At third singles, sophomore Emily Sullivan played the highlight match of the day, winning a marathon three-hour match. She battled back from being down 2-5 to win the first set 7-5. Losing the second set 5-7, she again recovered from a 2-5 hole to win the third in a tiebreaker, well after all the rest of the matches had been decided.

This was Sullivan's first ever varsity singles match, yet she outlasted her previously undefeated opponent in the 40 degree weather.

Of her two talented young singles players, Meehan said: "Liz seems very happy and comfortable at second singles, and Emily is really emerging as a force."

The first doubles pair of junior Julie Shea and freshman Kate Englander stomped their Green Wave counterparts, 6-1, 6-1. Now five matches into the season, this pair has developed into a formidable doubles team, even though both were normally singles players up until this season.

At second doubles, junior Nicole Needle and sophomore Corey Evans capped off the shutout, winning with a tidy 6-2, 6-2 score. Needle has come on strong to prove herself as a legitimate varsity player this season, previously winning 6-2, 6-1 at second singles against Norton.

Despite the relative ease Cohasset had in defeating their gracious hosts, this was only the first loss of the year for Abington, as they fall to 4-1.

The league seems a bit watered down this year on the girls side, and the Green Wave could very well sneak into third place in the SSL, and possibly even the state tourney.

As for now, many on the Cohasset team will shift their focus to the Individuals tournament, with the season's halfway point fast approaching.

Meehan sent a number of talented swingers last year, and hopes to send even more this year, with hopes of advancement in both doubles and singles.

Individuals will be held Mother's Day weekend, and the boys team, who were rained out of their match in Abington Tuesday, may send a few players as well.

and intelligence of a veteran. He got solid support from juniors Ben Lynner and Nick Spirito, and sophs Steve Davis and Conor Buick, who combined to hold Franklin – now 4-3 – to its lowest goal total of the season.

On the positive side, the Skippers won more than 50 percent of their face-offs for only the second time this season, and looked much improved on ground balls.

"We made some adjustments on the face-offs," said Orcutt. "First, we moved backup soph attackman Mike Devine to longstick midfield, and he did very well. We'll keep him there for now, because we believe he can do the job. Additionally, we got Robert Hickey back for the first time in nearly three weeks, and alternated him with senior Pete Whoriskey. Whoriskey turns out to be a solid face-off man, so between those two I think we've found a solution to that problem."

The Skippers, now 6-1, were to travel to Pilgrim rival Hanover on Tuesday for a 3:30 p.m. start. On Friday, Cohasset travels to Hingham for a rematch of last year's Div. 2 state championship game. Next Tuesday, April 30, the Skippers play their second night game of the season, hosting Pilgrim rival Marshfield at Alumni Field, with the opening face-off scheduled for 6 p.m.

"Everything to now has been preparation for the guts of our schedule," said Orcutt. "We have to make a commitment to ourselves, to the game and to success. We've got the skills. We need to have the heart."

Lacrosse Notes

Cohasset 8, Hanover 5

The Skippers improved to 7-1 (3-1 in Pilgrim Conference play) on Tuesday on the strength of big games from attackmen Jason Moore and Curt Kahn.

The Cohasset boys were staked to a 5-1 halftime lead on the road over their Pilgrim Conference rival Indians, and held on for an 8-5 finish.

The Skippers were led by three goals each from Kahn and Moore.

Coach Kevin Orcutt singled out his defense for praise. Nick Spirito, Ben Lynner and Chris Caron held off Hanover in the second half, as goalie Kyle Weber came up with several big saves. Midfielders Peter Whoriskey and Mike Devine also had outstanding games.

Cohasset visits Hingham on Friday (4 p.m. start)in a rematch of the 2001 state Div. 2 championship game.

Cohasset Youth Lax has best day ever

Teams roll to record seven wins on Sunday

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse has become accustomed to success in recent years, but it had never seen a day like Sunday, April 21. For the first time ever, the program won seven games in a day, sweeping five boys games for the third consecutive week, and scoring the first victories ever for its new girls program.

Three weeks into the season, the combined record of the Cohasset youth teams is now 17-2, with the all five of the boys teams currently at a perfect 3-0.

The Cohasset girls, playing their first of only two home games all spring, proved that teams tend to have their biggest improvement between their first and second games, as both the 12-U and 14-U squads controlled previously unbeaten Falmouth teams en route to their first-ever wins. Both girls teams now stand at 1-1 on the spring.

At the 12-U level (5th and 6th grades), a fast start and an aggressive never-let-up attitude set the tone for the day. Kaley Madge opened the scoring on a feed from Paige Sstrecker. Alexandra Graven and Gabriella Flibotte then scored unassisted goals to give Cohasset a three-goal cushion just four minutes into the game. Sara Brown scored her first goal to make it 4-0 before Falmouth made a brief run to close it to 4-2. Maura Barnes then scored two goals — the second on a feed from Graven — to put Cohasset back in command.

Cohasset scored less, but controlled the ball more in the second half. Brown scored on a feed from Barnes, then Flibotte added two goals — the last on a feed from Barnes — to close out the day.

McKenna Teague, Rebecca Evans, Maura Regan, Caroline McElhinny and Megan Richardson led a stout defense that kept Falmouth at bay all afternoon. Thomson Jaffe rang up five saves in the net, to make sure Falmouth never had a chance to get back in the game.

Next, it was the 14-U team (7th and 8th grades), and while Cohasset controlled the early flow of the game, it didn't break through until Sara Butman fed Kaleigh Swain. Michelle Madge picked up Cohasset's next two goals on powerful outside shots, the first on a feed from Elizabeth Landon, the second from Swain. Cohasset had two goals disallowed for fouls and Falmouth scored one to make it 3-1 at the half.

The teams played it even early in the second half, with Cohasset failing to convert several opportunities due to Falmouth's stellar goaltending. Finally, Lindsay Durkin and Caren Garber broke through to salt away the game, and Lisa Spirito scored her first goal just before time expired.

Tessa Leahy, Colleen Richardson, Jamie Genovese and Jessica Wheelwright — who played a particularly aggressive game after being hit in the mouth by a loose ball in the first half — kept the pressure off Aisling Guinee, who needed to make just four saves to register her first win in the net.

Meanwhile, three Cohasset teams traveled to Norwell, where the Cohasset White 12-U squad — or at least those members who weren't missing due to school break — showed no signs of a vacation week siesta, rolling into and over Norwell by a convincing 16-8 score.

Norwell scored first, but Cohasset quickly took control, finishing the first quarter with a 5-1 lead that reached 11-4 by the half. By the time Norwell made a run, it was the fourth quarter, when Cohasset had a 14-5 lead.

Peter Oswald became just the second 12-U player in the history of Cohasset Youth Lacrosse to record a double-digit day, racking up 7 goals and 3 assists. Crease attackman Charlie Czerkawski scored four goals and added an assist. Defenseman Kyle Pinkus had an impressive end-to-end rush for a goal, and TJ Kennedy, Peter Ernst, Owen Landon and Evan Deutsch also added single goals.

Mark Flibotte, normally an attackman but pressed into service as a goalie during vacation, was spectacular, ending the day with 18 saves to support the strong close-in defense of Pinkus, Kenny Muir, Mike Kusek and Frank Wheelright.

Next came the most exciting game of the day, with the Cohasset 14-U squad overcoming a five-goal fourth-quarter deficit en route to a 12-11 overtime win.

Norwell jumped to a 4-0 lead early in the first quarter and it looked like Cohasset was in for a long game. Mike Martone, Mike Pecca, Jared Kinch and Aidan Buick scored single goals as Cohasset battled back to 6-4 at halftime. The rally might have come all the way back had it not been for several shots that rang off the posts and crossbar.

Norwell quickly regained a four-goal edge to start the second half, and was able to hold it through the third quarter. Dan Trendowicz scored on a feed from Buick, as the period ended 9-5.

After Norwell stretched its edge to 10-5, Cohasset dominated the fourth quarter. Goals from Ryan Kucinski, Chris Davis, Kinch, Martone and Buick brought the game to a deadlock with under two minutes remaining. The action was fast and furious in the last minute and a half with goalie Jared Dick coming up with two key saves from close range and the defense of Jeff Brown, Dan McCarthy, Robert Silvia and Patrick Flynn thwarting the Norwell attack. But Norwell again took the lead at 11-10 before Pecca sprinted from his own end with less than a minute remaining and tied the game. Dick came up with another big save at point-blank range as the horn sounded to end regulation play.

In overtime, the game ended on a great end-to-end play as Brown made a strong check and takeaway on a Norwell attacker in front of the Cohasset cage and then passed to Pecca who scored the winner to finish a give-and-go with Buick.

For the third straight game, the 14-U team had a multitude of scorers, with Zack Etkind, Brandon Smith and Parker Berg all assisting on one goal each.

The last game of the day in Norwell saw the Cohasset White 10-U squad (3rd and 4th grades) inspired by the amazing comeback of its older brethren and getting off to a fast start. Luke Ernst, John Kearney and Oliver Forrer — off an assist from Andrew Graham — staked the team to a 3-1 first-quarter lead. The second quarter was all Cohasset, with Kearney striking twice, Will Wise, Chris Walsh and Enrico Teruzzi making it 8-1 at half. Patrick Cantillon nothced the assist on Teruzzi's goal.

Ian Quinlan — who played the first half in goal — scored twice from attack to open the third quarter. Taylor McQuade and Sean MacCarthy added their first goals of the year, before Ernst and Walsh scored again to close out the day with a 14-4 advantage.

Keegan Flynn, Andrew Cantillon, and Thomas Flibotte — while not getting into the scorebook - - were particularly noteworthy for their play at both ends of the field. Thomas Pecca, Kevin O'Connell and Terrance Durkin led a strong defensive effort.

Cohasset's other 10-U team, the Blue squad, faced its toughest opponent yet during the young season, and showed patience and poise in a 9-6 morning win in Sandwich. The Blue squad passed and moved the ball well — a highlight in a game featuring seven assisted goals — which proved to be the difference as Sandwich had difficulty finishing its opportunities.

Will Wise and Dean Driscoll scored four goal each, with Max Shipp picking up a goal and three assists. Justin Yeager, Chris Brown, Austin Meyers and Jack Murphy all picked up assists.

Nick Lieberman and Will Lynner were tough on defense, with Sebastian "Sea Bass" Braga and Mark Dick standing up to Sandwich's much-bigger attack.

And in Barnstable, the Cohasset Blue 12-U team continued its winning ways with a solid victory against a Barnstable team that was clearly the toughest opponent faced this season. While Barnstable looked formidable in both size and stature, Cohasset set the tone early with 4 unanswered goals in the 1st quarter on some outstanding give-and-go plays and crisp feeds and fakes from behind the cage. Leading the Cohasset charge was an all-star performance by Mike Grimm, who tossed in seven goals, while Alex Shipp scored twice and dished out three assists, including a beautiful laser to Nathan Porter for a quick-tick that wowed the crowd. Chris Rose, Matt Burgess (1 goal, 1 assist each) and Teddy Galligan (2 assists) also had multi-point games

The inside story behind this impressive win was the strong defensive play that kept the Barnstable team on their heels (and their backs) for most of the game. With a debut goaltending performance that shut out Barnstable for most of the 1st half (giving up only 2 goals until well into the 4th quarter), Chris Mills had 13 saves overall and looked like a seasoned veteran in the cage. Key to the defensive effort was the superb play by newcomer Mike Bilodeau, who repeatedly shut down Barnstable's leading scoring threats. David Crawford, Chris Kuppens, and Jake Cuneo completed the defensive dominance by turning back several fast breaks and stifling a number of scoring opportunities in front of the net.

The teams return to action on April 28, with the girls on the road in Norwell and all five boys teams playing home games at Milliken Field.

WORSHIP NOTES

'Living Christ'

"Come Meet the Living Christ" is the theme of a dynamic three-day mission that will be given from May 5-7 at St. Anthony Parish. The mission will be given by the Rev. Shannon Michael Collins, C.P.M., a 37-year-old Cohasset native and a gifted speaker who is a member of the Fathers of Mercy.

Collins will challenge and encourage participants to make a stronger personal commitment to Christ and His Church. He will speak at 7:30 p.m. May 5 and May 6, and also celebrate a Mass at 7:30 p.m. May 7. Confessions will be available after all talks and free babysitting for children under 10 will be provided. Families are urged to attend.

On Monday and Tuesday mornings, Collins will celebrate a 9 a.m. Mass and give a talk for those unable to attend the evening mission. Coffee and conversation will be offered in the parish center.

Collins, who was ordained in 2000, graduated from Cohasset High School, and was a former teacher at St. Jerome School, Weymouth. He is now the vocations director for the Fathers of Mercy, a congregation founded in 1806 (originally under the title Missionaries of France). The congregation's purpose was to re-evangelize the French people after the Church had been subjected to years of persecution during the French Revolution. It is now exclusively an American community whose primary apostolate is evangelizing through parish missions and retreats.

Women's health subject of bill

An informational forum on the proposed Woman's Right to Know Bill will be held Tuesday, April 30 at 7:30 p.m. at St. Anthony Parish Hall, 10 Summer St., Cohasset. The featured speakers will include Dr. Trudy Murphy and attorneys Robert Joyce and Susan Gay.

This free event is co-sponsored by several local chapters of the Massachusetts Citizens for Life: the South Shore, Braintree-Weymouth, Stoughton, Greater Taunton and Greater Attleboro chapters. Forum speakers will explain how this proposed bill (S.924 and H. 3953)advances women's health by guaranteeing informed choice.

Other voices at the Abbey

Glastonbury Abbey announces the final speaker in the 2001-2002 Glastonbury Series, "Listening to Other Voices: Spirituality in Everyday Life." The event is Thursday, May 2 at 7:15 p.m. at the Abbey's Conference Center. There is no fee for this program, however, free-will donations are welcome.

For more information, call 781-749-2155.

Monday evenings with Rabbi Karol

At Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St., Hingham, Rabbi Stephen Karol will teach a course on Monday evenings, in April and May, titled "So That Your Values Live On." The course will be based on the book of the same name, edited by Jack Riemer and Nathaniel Stampfer. This class will meet from 8 to 9:15 p.m. April 29, May 6 and May 13.

This course will help to answer such questions as, What values are most important to you? How do you let your family and friends know? Which values do you want to be a part of your life and the life of your congregation? The ethical wills of famous Jews such as Theodor Herzel, Rabbi Avraham Kook, Hannah Senesh and Sholom Aleichem will be read, among others; also, students will have an opportunity to write their own ethical wills.

The book is available in most bookstores. There is no fee for the class itself. Non-members are always welcome, and the temple is wheelchair accessible. Advance signup would be appreciated. For more information or to sign up for this course, call 781-749-8103.

Fishermen enlisted to fight terrorism

Cohasset Police Chief Robert Jackson is enlisting the help of the town's 40 commercial fishermen in an anti-terrorism effort.

U.S. Director of Homeland Security Tom Ridge has stressed defense of the homeland and asked local law enforcement agencies to reach out and ask people to be more vigilant.

To that end, Jackson sent a letter to the fishermen, who have "intimate knowledge" of the coast, to act as the Cohasset Police Department's "eyes and ears at sea."

"I only ask that you report any suspicious activity to use so that we may properly investigate and bring the necessary resources to bear," he said.

The Cohasset Police Association also provided a yellow sticker for the fishermen with reporting instructions.

Jackson said there haven't been any incidents but in conjunction with the US Coast Guard, Cohasset police have been on heightened alert since Sept. 11. He said police are responsible for the protection of the Cohasset shoreline and waters out to three miles.

Hingham songstress Dawna Hammers has been making the Earth Day rounds this month bringing with her, her "Music for the Heart and Soul."

Songs for the spirit

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Dawna Hammers is described in the local press as a visionary singer/songwriter. She describes that vision as "Music for the Heart and Soul."

For some listeners, this message carries on a certain 1960s spirit of music recognized as a worldwide spiritual, political and healing force. While this sort of idealism has drifted in and out of vogue over the last 30 years, the Hingham songstress believes the message itself to be timeless, and perhaps even more necessary in the current uncertain times. In her independent CD-released recordings and series of live performances around New England, Hammers unwaveringly carries the what's-so-funny-about-peace-love-and-understanding flag.

Not surprisingly, on-going and upcoming Earth Day musical events has kept Hammers busy of late.Fresh off a successful appearance in Falmouth last weekend for the annual Earth Day Dance Vision Festival at the Unitarian-Universalist Parish, Hammers returns to Hingham this Friday, April 26 for her regular monthly concert date at the Old Ship Church Fellowship Hall. The show, "Chant Drum & Dance Circle!," also features the singer's area-volunteer children's chorus group, Dawna & the Dreamers, and begins at 7:30 p.m.

"This is always a chance for people to experience making music as a community," said Hammers, 42, at her waterfront home in Hingham's Crow Point. "For me, an important part of music is that community spirit. People don't get together and make music anymore like they used to. It's a very natural thing, but it's something that's missing in the modern, fast-paced society. I think it's important to bring that sort of thing back."

"Melody" is singer/songwriter Dawna Hammers' most recent release.

But Hammers' New-Age-inspired approach should not give listeners the idea that her music is inaccessible. On her latest solo CD "Melody," which was released last November along with a benefit-show live disc with her children's group The Dreamers, Hammers delivers eleven original songs with the vocal-instrumental feel of classic 60s-70s influences Carole King, James Taylor and Laura Nyro as well as more contemporary players such as Sarah MacLachlan. She manages to give songs with titles like "Feel Your Soul," "Medicine Woman" and "On the Earth" a distinct pop appeal.

Hammers had the experience of meeting both King and Taylor back in the mid 70s, introduced to them by her late older sister, Leslie Anne Flood. The singer in fact comes from a musical/entertainment family; her father, Johnny Hammers, was a jazz saxophonist and clarinetist who once owned the South Shore Music Store in Quincy, her mother, Elaine, was a tap dancer.

Melody also contains a song, "One Spirit," which Hammers recorded in a pre-scheduled studio date on the night of September 11. The song, a spiritual, world-music-inspired chant produced in the midst of a suddenly highly-charged atmosphere, features a guest appearance by the singer's friend and well-praised, Boston-based African drummer/percussionist Babatunde Olatunji, who has performed with Carlos Santana and the Grateful Dead's Mickey Hart among others.

"Music can always be a powerful healing force. I believe that the land needs it, and people need it, especially these days," Hammers said.

For more information on Hammers or to purchase her CDs visit her Web site at www.dawna-hammers.com. Locally, Hammers' CDs are available at Andrew Zona Hair Salon in Hingham Center.

Fuller gets crafty

Brockton museum has new niche

By KATHLEEN ZIGMONT
CORRESPONDENT

One of the area's leading art museums has decided to make a change in focus that its director hopes will make it a leading institution in a specific niche, will better utilize its collection, and will bring more crowds through the doors.

The Fuller Museum of Art in Brockton, which since the 1960s has always shown contemporary art, will soon be a contemporary craft museum. Contemporary craft includes one of a kind works of art in a variety of media, such as glass, metal, wood, ceramics and fiber.

By shifting its focus, the Fuller will join the ranks of a select few craft museums in the country, including the American Craft Museum, the Renwick Gallery of the Smithsonian and the Corning Museum of Glass and will be the only institution of its kind in the area.

FMA Director Jennifer Atkinson said the change came about after museum personnel noticed attendance at high craft shows were, time after time, the most highly attended.

"We wanted to create a niche in the area. We found that people were traveling from as far away as Pennsylvania and Maine for some of our high crafts shows. There's just no other venue around," said Atkinson.

FMA officials also said the change will capitalize on the rich history of crafts and workmanship in the New England region, with exhibits focusing on quilting, furniture, glass making and woodworking, to name a few. The FMA will collaborate with craft institutions, recognized craft artists, galleries, community associations and patrons to heighten public awareness, understanding and appreciation of fine crafts.

Michael Darmody, FMA director of development, said feedback so far has been very positive.

"We've done focus groups, talked to some of the leading opinion makers and fine arts experts. They are all very enthusiastic. It's a big change, but one that was a long time coming," he said.

One look at the business section of the newspaper shows that times are changing for everyone, including museums. We decided to set a strategy for a new direction and go for it," he said.

Darmody said that even the area's tourism boards and commissions were happy with the proposed change, which is expected to draw craft collectors, practitioners and visitors to the area.

The museum plans to base its collection on pieces they already have, then host traveling exhibitions and acquire pieces when they can.

"We have a very nice small collection to start with and will begin acquiring pieces when we can afford them. In that respect, it will enhance our ability to collect because craft pieces are usually priced less expensively than paintings," said Darmody.

Darmody said that while feedback on the proposed change has been positive, that may be some who are uncomfortable with the change.

"Not everyone is familiar with high craft. They may think arts and crafts and think construction paper and popsicle sticks. But the line between high craft and art is blurring. We encourage people to come and see what high craft is and are confident they will like it," he said.

Darmody said the change fits in with a proposed renovation to the museum, which will include a children's gallery expected to house many of the museum's current pieces. While not all of the current collection will be retained, the museum expects to keep many of the oldest and most beloved pieces.

The Children's Discovery Gallery, Darmody said, is planned to help area art teachers dovetail their lessons with the museum's collection.

"In the past, it's been difficult for teachers to plan their lessons around what we had because so much of our collection is temporary. This way, we can house a permanent collection that teachers can use with their lesson plans," he said.

The museum plans to retain current programming and exhibitions thorough the rest of the year, with major crafts exhibitions commencing in January of 2003. The FMA also plans to add more crafts classes and workshops at that time as well.

Darmody said that while the change may surprise some, the museum expects everyone to be pleased when they see the quality of the works that the museum will show..

"We think people will relate more clearly with this type of collection," he said.

The fastest chicken in the west

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

The term "paillard" is familiar to anyone who eats out at expense-account restaurants. It refers to an extremely thin cut of meat or fish that is then cooked quickly. (The name comes from a 19th century Parisian restaurant – Paillard's.) I set my sights on chicken paillard and wanted to find a technique for making it juicy and tender while serving it with a simple pan sauce.

After some testing, I decided that a paillard of chicken should be 1/4-inch thick and that skinless, boneless chicken breasts were the cut of choice. Starting with four breasts, I found it best to cut each piece in half. Otherwise, the pieces are hard to arrange in the skillet and the pounding process easily reduces larger pieces to mush. I found that it was best to layer the chicken in plastic wrap and use a meat pounder although a small heavy skillet works fine as well. One other trick — it is best to pound the chicken pieces with the smooth side up (the side that was in contact with the skin). This prevents the chicken from falling apart during the pounding process.

Before investigating cooking, I wondered if brining would help keep the paillard moist. This proved to be a dead end since these super-thin chicken pieces soaked up brine like a sponge, rendering them salty and artificial tasting. The unbrined chicken had much better flavor.

I cooked the pounded paillards in a combination of butter and olive oil after seasoning them with salt and pepper. The thin pieces of chicken cooked in about two minutes per side over medium high heat. This temperature was hot enough to achieve a spotty brown color and still maintain a juicy tender interior. When I cooked the chicken more slowly it became tough. Higher temperatures simply burned the butter and created a bitter flavor. The chicken needs to be cooked in batches with a bit of oil and butter added as needed. Even so, the first batch is still hot by the time the last batch is finished.

As for serving suggestions, a simple drizzle of high quality olive oil and a squeeze of lemon juice does the trick. (During summer months pesto is another nice choice.) Of course the chicken may also be popped into a sandwich. For a quick pan sauce, I found that white wine was the liquid of choice followed by some chicken stock. Then I tried adding a variety of herbs, preferring thyme and/or parsley. I tried adding many of the usual players like anchovy, mustard, garlic, and shallots to the sauce. The anchovy, mustard and garlic were too pungent but one finely chopped shallot was a pleasant but not essential addition. I thickened the sauce with three tablespoons of cold butter that were stirred in off the heat. As with any sauce mounted with butter the sauce finished with velvety consistency and was not at all heavy. In the end this quick pan sauce gave the paillards an elegant, flavorful cloak.

PAILLARD OF CHICKEN

The chicken may also be grilled over high heat for one minute per side. If grilling, omit the butter in the recipe below and brush the pounded chicken pieces lightly with olive oil before seasoning with salt and pepper. No matter how you cook the chicken, you can also pound the tenders (see recipe, step one) and cook them along with the rest of the breast meat. Be careful not to overcook the chicken.

For the chicken:
4 boneless, skinless chicken breasts (halves)
Salt
Freshly ground pepper
2 tablespoons best quality olive oil
2 tablespoons unsalted butter

For the optional herb-butter sauce:
1/4 cup dry white wine
1 medium shallot, finely chopped (optional)
1/3 cup chicken stock
1 teaspoon fresh thyme or Italian flat leaf parsley or a combination of both
3 tablespoons cold unsalted butter cut into 1/2-inch pieces

For the chicken:
1. Remove the tender (the small piece under the breast) and cut remaining breast half vertically into two equal pieces. (Cut down through the chicken breasts.) Using a flat meat pounder or small skillet pound the chicken (smooth side up) between two pieces of clear plastic wrap to a thickness of 1/4 inch. Season chicken pieces with salt and freshly ground pepper.

2. Place a heavy-duty 12-inch skillet over medium high until hot, about 3 minutes. Add one tablespoon each olive oil and butter. Once the butter stops foaming swirl skillet to evenly coat the surface with the butter and olive oil. Add as many chicken pieces as will fit in one layer without crowding and cook until spotted deep golden brown, about two minutes. Turn the chicken pieces and cook for an additional two minutes or until colored similarly to the first side. Note that cooking time will vary a great deal depending on your skillet and your stovetop! Remove to a warm plate and cover with aluminum foil. Repeat with additional pieces in batches adding a bit each of olive oil and butter as needed. Serve with optional herb-butter sauce, green sauce, or a scant drizzle of best quality olive oil and squeeze of lemon juice.

For the Sauce:
Once all the chicken is cooked, add the wine and optional shallot to the skillet. Using a spatula scrape any browned bits that may be stuck to the bottom of the pan. Cook until the wine is almost completely reduced 1 to 2 minutes. Add the chicken stock and the chopped herb(s) and cook about 3 minutes longer or until the liquid is reduced by about two-thirds and has thickened slightly. Off heat stir in the cold butter pieces. Adjust seasoning with salt and pepper if needed. Serve spooned over the chicken pailliards.

SIMPLE GREEN SAUCE

Use this sauce as an alternative to the pan sauce.

1/2 cup best quality olive oil
2 tablespoons red wine or white balsamic vinegar
1 slice or about one cup day old or firm bakery style white bread, crust remove and broken into about 1 inch pieces
2 tablespoons capers, drained well
1 medium clove garlic, peeled and coarsely chopped
2 cups Italian flat parsley leaves, coarsely chopped loosely packed
2 anchovy fillets, coarsely chopped
1 teaspoon Dijon mustard
1/8 teaspoon salt or to taste and freshly ground black pepper

Add the oil and vinegar to the bowl of a food processor. Place the bread in the bowl, letting it sit in the puddles of oil/vinegar and not on top of the blade. Let sit for 5 minutes. Add the remaining ingredients and process for about 40 seconds or until the mixture is finely chopped and homogenous, stopping to scrape the sides of the bowl if necessary. Serve immediately or refrigerate for up to 2 days.

Makes about 1 cup.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 24

A full moon is building up, adding energy and intensity to the next couple of days. It's a good time to take on a big work project. You can be most productive. The Virgo moon aligns with Venus at 10:06 a.m. and becomes inactive. At 12:22 p.m. the moon enters Libra, generating a social mood. This is a wonderful afternoon/evening for making new contacts, meeting people, establishing new partnerships.

THURSDAY, APRIL 25

Gear up for a fast-paced, exciting day. The moon continues to travel in Libra, forming harmonious contacts to Saturn in the morning and Pluto in the afternoon. Venus enters Gemini at 1:57 p.m., remaining there until May 20. People will be friendly, outgoing, cooperative. New starts in your personal or professional life are recommended. The evening is prime for social activities, romantic rendezvous.

FRIDAY, APRIL 26

A full moon warns you to channel high energy constructively. Stay busy with practical projects. Avoid making impulsive purchases or decisions. It is better to finish old projects rather than starting new ones. Others may be irritable, argumentative. Keep a cool head. The Libra moon becomes inactive at 9:29 a.m. until 12:15 p.m., when it enters Scorpio. The full moon culminates at 11:00 p.m., 7-degrees of Scorpio.

SATURDAY, APRIL 27

It may take a while for the morning fog to burn off. Slow down and pay extra attention to details. Avoid rigid time schedules. Tackle projects that need cleaning out, redoing; get rid of the clutter. Take extra quiet time out for yourself; reflect on and learn from past experiences. Let go of recent hurts, traumas; open your heart to higher visions.

SUNDAY, APRIL 28

A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Uranus takes center stage today. Expect the unexpected. If you have work projects to accomplish, it is better to handle a variety of odd jobs rather than one that demands mental focus and concentration. The Scorpio moon aligns with Mercury and Uranus until 10:25 a.m., when it becomes inactive. A Sagittarius moon takes over at 1:13 p.m., urging you to be more adventurous, spontaneous. Take a vacation from routine and responsibilities; enjoy favorite friends and pastimes.

MONDAY, APRIL 29

Conflicting planetary influences can make for a hectic day. The Sagittarius moon opposes Mars and Saturn in the morning, and conjoins Pluto in the evening. Be sure to have a clear plan of action in order to avoid spinning your wheels. People will be talkative, impulsive, easily distracted from practical matters. An alignment of Mars and Neptune adds to the confusion. Plan a quiet evening. Renew your spirit through time spent in meditation, art or music.

TUESDAY, APRIL 30

This is a great day for vacationing. The planet Mercury enters Gemini at 3:16 a.m. Mercury will turn retrograde when it reaches 10-degrees of Gemini, May 15. The adventurous Sagittarius moon aligns with freedom-loving Uranus at 2:10 p.m. and becomes inactive. If you are working, you can make gains developing people-oriented projects, sales and promotion campaigns. Influences begin to turn around at 5:03 p.m., when the moon enters pragmatic Capricorn.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 1, 2002

Plan to get primary ventures off the ground during the first week of May. After that a Mercury retrograde period begins to take effect, placing all important signings, decisions, new starts off limits. In addition, a lunar eclipse/full moon culminates May 26. Gear up for an intense, hectic month. Planetary action today offers particularly favorable influences between 9:00 a.m.-1:16 p.m., when the Capricorn moon becomes inactive. Zero in on career, business issues and initiate action in this time period. The remainder of the afternoon and evening are prime for finishing projects already begun and tying up loose ends.

Springtime splendor in the shady border

Green thumbs up

Part 1

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Tiny flakes of pale pink confetti float to the earth as a crisp morning breeze scatters the delicate blossoms of my weeping cherry. Beneath the pewter gray branches of the magnolias lies a satin blanket of pink and white petals. Sizzling, record-breaking temperatures during the past week catapulted our landscapes into bloom and just as abruptly, these fleeting flowers have departed. Mother Nature continues to bewilder gardeners with her fickle offerings as chilly showers mixed with snowflakes are in the forecast for the coming week.

As spring progresses and our perennial gardens come to life, the shady borders are often the first to burst into bloom. Many of our shade-loving plants hasten to flower early in the season, eager to take advantage of the bright spring sunlight and display their colorful blossoms before the overhead canopy fully leafs out. Woodland gardens are in their glory during the coming weeks adorned with patches of blue, white, pink and yellow flowers. The blooms of many of these charming plants pass quickly by and while some of these spring ephemerals go dormant shortly after their cheerful display, their brief appearance creates an irresistible desire to stroll the gardens and nearby woodlands.

While many gardeners view shaded spaces as overwhelming challenges unfit for cultivation, others have learned to overcome the obstacles posed by low light and competitive root systems, creating inviting, multi-colored, tranquil settings. By pruning branches to let in additional light, amending the existing soil with organic matter, and selecting plants appropriate to the existing soil and light conditions, beds can be developed that provide color, texture and beauty in all seasons.

Each year, I discover new treasures to add to my ever-expanding shady borders. Among these special delights, few rival the beauty of the double bloodroot blossoms (Sanguinaria canadensis 'Flore Pleno') that grow in a small colony alongside my water garden. A rare double form of a native wildflower, these exquisite white flowers resemble miniature water lilies and emerge early in the season amid lobed blue-green leaves, which curl around their stems. Their petals drop in a matter of a few days although a few secondary blossoms follow to extend the momentary glimpse of this woodland jewel.

Nearby, the heavenly azure blue blossoms of Pulmonaria angustifolia provide a stunning backdrop to the glistening white bloodroots. Although this lungwort lacks the dramatic foliage of many of its relatives, the intensity of its deep blue flowers make it worthy of a place in my garden. Throughout my shady borders, clumps of Pulmonarias have come into flower this week, showing off pretty clusters of small tubular flowers in a variety of shades including pink, red, salmon, blue and white. Attractive silver-spotted or streaked foliage will enlarge as the season progresses and furnish sensational accents throughout the summer months. New cultivars appear each year offering an expanding range of leaf patterns and flower colors.

Local nurseries are beginning to offer many of these newer lungwort selections, most of which look quite similar in containers early in the season until their leaves fully develop several weeks after the flowers fade. Look for P. 'Majeste' or P. 'Excalibur' to add bold silver foliage to the garden. Narrow, leathery, deep green, spotted leaves characterize P. 'Bertram Anderson' and P. 'Roy Davidson', the latter exhibiting pretty baby blue flowers. Other cultivars to seek include P. 'David Ward which features large, gray-green leaves with broad white margins and cherry-colored blossoms, P. 'Mrs. Moon' with light blue blossoms, and P. 'Sissinghurst White', its pure white blooms glow against the deep green mottled foliage. Given partial shade and well-drained, moisture-retentive soils, these hardy perennials will often seed about the border as their clumps gradually enlarge each year.

The primrose family (Primula spp.) features a number of lovely additions to the moist, well-drained shady border. The majority of these charming perennials present bright green rosettes with elongated leaves resembling lettuce. My personal favorites are the early-blooming drumstick primroses, P. denticulata, which give the appearance of giant Tootsie Roll Pops as clusters of lavender, carmine or white flowers form dense spheres above thick fleshy 6-inch stems. The common name of cowslip belongs to Primula veris, whose bundles of nodding electric yellow flowers are similarly held on erect stems above the foliage and glow from afar. The spectacular, multicolored primroses that bear bright yellow centers belong to the polyanthus group of primroses and are often marginally hardy. These may be best considered annuals although some persist and may rebloom when cooler temperatures return in autumn. In consistently damp, boggy areas, the candelabra primroses, P. japonica, are a unique, delightful addition. Stems bear spokes of pink, red or white flowers; a new layer of flowering whorls appears above the previous cluster as the stems continue to elongate and produce flowers for several weeks.

Early May is a prime time to plan a visit to Garden in the Woods, the botanical garden of the New England Wildflower Society, located in Framingham. The flora of temperate North America is featured in extensive gardens and naturalistic plantings nestled in among rolling hills, babbling brooks and ponds. Many rare and endangered species are grown, studied and preserved.

It's a dog's world

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Come Winston and Kendall, Puck and Salina. Come Nikko and Tara, Shadow and Sasha. No, this isn't a new Christmas jingle, but a few of the names of the almost 1,000 dogs in Cohasset.

Dogs have long been billed as a man's best friend and have been domesticated animals for thousands of years. The loyal, playful, and tail-wagging canines can bring a smile to most any animal lover.

The range in names of the animals in town runs the gamut. Two of the more "royal" dogs in town include Mr. Dibb, a king charles on Little Harbor Road, and Sir Maxwell, a bassett hound on Locust Road.

There are also myriad breeds of canines in town. But there are clearly two favorites: Of the 1,000 dogs in Cohasset, nearly 130 of them, or 13 percent, are golden retrievers. The town is also home to almost 175 Labradors in all colors: yellow, black, and brown.

Paul Murphy, the town's animal control officer, said the labs and goldens aren't status symbols, they're simply the most affectionate dogs.

"They're gentle and caring dogs," Murphy said. "They have a wonderful disposition."

While the labs and golden retrievers make up most of the town's puppy population, there are also some very unique breeds of dogs in Cohasset.

Town finds it pays to recycle

Cohasset is losing weight at record levels. No, Weight Watchers hasn't opened up a host of new classes in town and the diet drug fen-phen isn't back on the US market.

But, nevertheless, in just eight months Cohasset has dropped slightly more than 100 tons of weight. And it is tonnage that can fatten up the town coffers.

Thanks to Pay-As-You-Throw enacted last July, residents are separating their trash more than before.

Thanks to Pay-As-You-Throw enacted last July, residents are separating their trash more than before. And as a result, the town is sending about 100 tons less per month to SEMASS, the incinerator in Rochester, Mass.

According to Selectman Merle Brown, who also sits on the Recycling Committee, the cost per ton or tipping fee at SEMASS is up about $3 from $83.76 last fall; transportation costs are also up about $6 a load. But even with the increases, the town is saving some $10,000 a month because of increased recycling, if current trends continue. The town pays about $304 per load to have the trash taken to SEMASS, but that amount varies due to different sizes of the loads and the amount of times a load is taken each month.

DEP landfill settlement gets mixed reviews

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cohasset Heights Landfill has closed a chapter with the state Department of Environmental Protection, which fined it for exceeding its permitted level back in the mid-1990s.

Paul Barry, owner of the now-closed landfill, said he has already paid the $100,000 fine the DEP levied as part of its consent order issued last week.

Now the ball goes back into the town's court. The town will decide whether Barry has to remove the excess fill in the landfill or leave it where it is.

Barry says removing the fill makes no sense.

"We'd be dealing with odors, digging through the liners and everything else," he said this week.

But the anti-landfill group SAFE — which stands for Stop Any Further Expansion — is not happy with the DEP fine nor does it advocate leaving the excess tonnage of fill where it is.

Sixth-grade girls' makeup draws too much attention

Dress code concerns at Deer Hill considered

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The current trend of sixth-grade girls wearing eyeliner and eye shadow, lipstick and blush to school has prompted some school officials to examine the dress code for the grade 4-6 elementary school.

Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan, along with the school's PSO, is exploring banning the use of makeup in the dress code, which appears in the school handbook.

"We're in the elementary school," Callahan explained. "Some people may say we're old fashioned but I think it's a distraction to the learning environment."

"Some people may say we're old fashioned but I think it's a distraction to the learning environment."
— Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan

However, not everyone is in favor of a stricter policy statement.

School Committee member Chartis Tebbetts is opposed to banning makeup in the school. She said the school should be very careful when dealing with the issue of freedom of expression.

"I think 10-year-olds should have the same rights as 50-year-olds," she said. "We're treading on dangerous territory if we start telling our kids how they should look."

The issue surfaced two months ago at a PSO meeting when concerned parents brought the problem to that board's attention.

School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn says he wants more input from the community before coming to a conclusion. Although he said he has no daughters, he ventured to say that he believes early use of makeup could be attributed to such pop stars as Britney Spears and Christina Auguilera, who appeal to youngsters.

"Through various media outlets that our students are constantly bombarded with, our kids are now growing up faster," he said.

School board gives Buckley's Hagerty plan high marks

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

An effort to turn the dilapidated Hagerty house off Parker Avenue into a center for maritime education gained some momentum last week.

Jack Buckley, leader for a group advocating the establishment of an environmental education and research facility center at the Hagerty house, gave an informal presentation of his concept to the School Committee.

Buckley, a teacher at Cohasset Middle High-School, outlined the Coastal Maritime Institute's interest in the building at Thursday's meeting. CMI is an organization that provides summer classes to students curious about marine life. The organization also offers a rowing program to students at the high school.

"Over the years, the vision for that building has been a maritime research center," Buckley said. "We think a harbor-based educational facility is a solid idea and it's something we want to pursue."

(Kevin Ulmer of Cohasset previously proposed a marine education, research center dubbed the "Cohasset Lobster Lab" but selectmen terminated the its $1 a year lease because the non-profit organization did not meet the conditions of the lease in terms of building upkeep and fund-raising.)

The School Committee was receptive to Buckley's conceptual idea and voted unanimously to support the project in theory. This support comes with no strings attached — meaning the school department has not pledged any money or time to the project.

"The history in town at that building has not been great but I get goose bumps thinking about the possibilities it offers," said School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn. "I think it's a great idea."

The Hagerty House, which once served as the offices and showroom for Cohasset Colonials that manufactured furniture kits, sits on 2.1 acres of what is now Mariners Park at the end of Parker Avenue.

Buckley emphasized that he has a lot more work to do concerning the funding for the proposal and particulars like transportation and insurance.

"We still have a lot of research ahead of us," Buckley said. "But this would be a wonderful place for students to do some focused maritime research."

David Magnussen, a science teacher at the high school, said the potential facilities that could be installed at the Hagerty House would have many uses.

"What we really want to do is create an experiential learning program," Magnussen said. "There are some marvelous kids who are coming down the pipeline and if we continue to offer these great programs we'll give them a wonderful chance to excel."

Buckley said he has approached the South Shore Art Center in an attempt to create a partnership in the building. He said he envisioned having the center use the second and third floors of the building for studio space. A source of income could be generated from its monthly rental payments.

"We're trying to see this become a reality," Buckley said. "I envision this building benefiting many groups in town."

School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo would like to see some evidence of how Buckley intends to fund the project. However, he said the idea is an exciting one.

"The concept sounds very interesting," DeGiacomo said. "To have programs like this exist in our schools would be wonderful."

Selectmen have given Buckley until the fall to come up with some solid figures.

In the meantime, Buckley continues to work hard on all aspects of the proposal.

Buckley has worked with students in preparing final drafts of harbor study reports to be presented to the Board of Health in May. He has also convened students, teachers, town officials, and scientific consultants for three meetings to work on these reports.

Buckley has also submitted a variety of grants, ranging from $5,000-$20,000, which he hopes to hear a response on soon. He has also secured a donation of 12 high-speed computers and workstations and office furniture from Apto Solutions.

"We've accomplished much in five months," Buckley stated in a letter to the Mariner last month. "We will soon know if we have been successful in our grant applications and if so, we will be in a fairly good position to carry our initiative forward."

Graham Waste special permit mulled

Plans to move across 3A

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It's unlikely that Graham Waste Services, currently at 110 CJC Highway (Rte. 3A), will go the way of Hingham Lumber and be forced to move out of its hometown because of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority's plan to take its property by eminent domain.

While Hingham Lumber is moving from its Summer Street location in Hingham to Route 3A in Cohasset, next to Cohasset Collision, Graham Waste is clearing hurdles at Town Hall so it can stay in town and relocate across the street to Crocker Lane near the former Cohasset Heights Landfill.

Both businesses are moving to make room for new train stations as part of the restoration of the Greenbush railroad line, which is expected to resume service in 2005.

The Planning Board has approved the building plan for Graham Waste with conditions.

The Zoning Board of Appeals has taken under advisement the question of whether to issue the project the special permit required because part of the proposed warehouse facility would be in the water resources district.

A sticking point with the ZBA could have been whether Graham Waste qualifies as a "solid-waste facility," a use that is not allowed in the water resources district.

Graham Waste, a construction-debris waste company that supplies roll-off containers to work sites, plans to construct a 25,000-square-foot warehouse and 7,000-square-foot office – but about 60 percent of the warehouse would lie in the water resources district.

Town counsel, which the ZBA asked to weigh in on the matter, has stated that the proposed use does not come within the meaning of a solid-waste facility because it would not involve the "dumping, incineration, handling and/or transfer of solid waste.

"The proposed use is primarily the storage of empty truck and containers and involves only the occasional storing of trucks full of solid waste within a building," wrote John Richard Hucksam, Jr., of Deutsch Williams Brooks DeRensis & Holland, the law firm the town has retained to serve as town counsel.

Most of the time, containers at the site would be empty because they are usually hauled directly from the construction site to a landfill or transfer station before returning to the company's facility.

The Water Commission had asked for all floor drains in the warehouse to be located outside the water resources district to reduce any potential threats of contamination. It suggested any runoff be directed over the floor to the drains which lie outside the district. The drains are piped to a closed tank.

But the engineer for Graham Waste said eliminating floor drains in the part of the garage that lies within the district would diminish the site's cleanliness.

Building Inspector Bob Egan said there is little threat of pollution from the drains. He explained the floor drainage system is installed before the concrete floor is laid. The cast-iron pipes are pressure-tested and are not set in concrete but in sand so they are insulated from any movement.

Kevin O'Donnell, 248 King St., who opposes the project at that location, wanted assurance that Graham Waste would only deal in construction and demolition debris, and not household waste. He asked that that be spelled out as a condition of the special permit. He also wanted it specified that any full containers would be stored inside the building. O'Donnell was one of several environmental activists in town who opposed expansion of the now-closed Cohasset Heights Landfill, which Barry also owns.

O'Donnell said it was not necessary that Graham Waste move to this location.

"There is no hardship here other than convenience of the landowner," he said. O'Donnell said the owner had a history of problems in complying with ZBA decisions when the landfill was there. He questioned why the warehouse should be allowed in the water resources district — potentially opening it up to further problems.

John Cavanaro, Graham's engineer, pointed out that Graham Waste has gone to great lengths to minimize impact on the water resources district. The company has also proposed an elaborate drainage infrastructure, including roof collection and a series of catch basins to collect water runoff and separate any oil and grit before the water is recharged into the soil. Cavanaro said the company was making the best use of the site in deciding where to locate the building and related infrastructure .

He said the goal was to maintain the business in Cohasset despite being displaced by the MBTA.

"It's just a slap on the wrist," said SAFE member Kevin O'Donnell of the fine. O'Donnell also said fill has been removed from other landfills before without environmental consequences.

John McNabb, also of SAFE, said the $100,000 fine is too little.

"It is woefully inadequate, considering CHL made more than $1million from the extra waste they illegally dumped, violating the site assignment and the DEP plan approval."

McNabb said the DEP should also have provided the town with money to conduct environmental monitoring.

CHL disposed of solid waste outside the approved site assignment area established by the Board of Health in 1996, as well as above approved maximum elevations established by the permit from the DEP.

The consent order directs CHL not to accept any more solid waste — a moot issue because the landfill has been closed since 1998. It also states the order is not an admission that CHL violated any laws or regulations.

"The parties have agreed to enter into this Consent Order because they agree that it is in their own interests, and in the public interest, to proceed promptly with the actions called for herein rather than expend additional time and resources litigating the allegations..." the DEP states.

DEP spokesman Ross Edward said "consent orders" are a common tool to resolve disputes.

"We do hundreds of them a year," he said. Edward said the consent order provides a formal resolution to the issue of overfilling.

"CHL sat down with us to resolve this long-standing issue," he said.

Edward also said the DEP used a formula to determine the amount of the fine, which he said was fair. The DEP almost never fines up to the $25,000 a day that it is allowed to by statute.

"We would not have signed an agreement if we didn't think it was a fair amount," he said of the CHL consent order.

Selectman Tom Callahan, a former conservation commissioner, said it was unfortunate the fine couldn't be turned over to the town because it will face the consequences of any environmental damage.

"We would not have signed an agreement if we didn't think it was a fair amount."
— Ross Edward, DEP

"Whatever the consequences of overfilling are — we'll feel it," he said.

The town is still negotiating with CHL on financial assurances regarding its closure plans — which, once resolved, could close the book on what has been a litigious relationship for some time. The agreement would also prohibit any further landfill use at the site, as well as establishment of a transfer station at the property.

Both town officials and Barry have said they hope the closure plan, which is being ironed out among five town boards and CHL, would put an end to all pending lawsuits on both sides.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said all lawsuits were on hold pending the outcome of the negotiations, so the town has not had to pay further legal fees.

"What is entailed now is, Barry has to cap it, close it and put bonds in place, so if anything fails there is money to cover it," Haddad said.

Barry said his aim is to get the landfill capped and move on.

"My goal is to bring all this to an end," he said.

Town finds it pays to recycle

Brown said the savings are being evaluated so the Recycling Transfer Facility budget has not been reduced as yet. But what isn't spent on recycling, and materials or equipment for the RTF will go into the general fund.

"We have to make some changes at the RTF because of the volume of recyclables we get now," he said.

But the savings did prompt selectmen to reduce the annual sticker fee to the RTF from the current $50 to $35. The cost for a second sticker and for senior citizens will also be reduced to $20 starting July 1. Down the road, selectmen hope to reduce the sticker fee even more.

Pay-As-You-Throw — through which residents pay $1 for a 30-gallon trash bag or 50 cents for a 15-gallon bag — went into effect last July 1. The program is intended to force residents to recycle more by making them pay for special, blue trash bags marked "Town of Cohasset" in which they dispose of their weekly non-recyclable rubbish. The philosophy behind the program if people recycle more, the less they will have to throw away.

The town has to pay $15 per ton to have newspaper taken away. Brown said before Pay-As-You-Throw went into effect, newspaper recycling averaged about 54 tons per month. Currently newspaper recycling is up about 10 tons a month.

He said the biggest jump in recycling materials has been in corrugated materials and plastics. As a result, the town bought two compactors, which are less labor intensive than having the RTF workers put the material into bundles or bales. The compactors condense the items.

The town is also co-mingling plastics, meaning all the plastics go into the same container – a move that also saves labor costs.

Due to improvements in recycling, the town also qualified for nearly $2,000 in a state grant through the Municipal Recycling Incentive Program run by the state Department of Environmental Protection. One of the grant's criteria is to track the recyclable material the town buys so the items contain some recycled material. The town and schools buy photocopying paper, toner for copiers, paper towels and toilet paper and some cleaners that contain recycled materials, Brown said. The state wants towns to spend a minimum of $1 per capita on recycled materials. In Cohasset's case that would be $7,800 but the town is actually spending 19 times that amount or about $148,000 a year on recycled materials.

"This will be a great help in our next go-round for a MRIP grant," Brown said.

He said other recycling grant money has been used to purchase junk-mail reduction kits, roll-off containers, transfer station signs and consumer education materials.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

MAY IS HERE

Hello Cohasset. Can you believe that May is here? I am hoping for some warmer weather but I am not going to complain for what we are getting one little bit. As we get ready for the hectic and often overwhelming times of May and June, make sure to always stop for a bit and enjoy everyone and everything around you. The children in your lives, the flowers that come and go with the seasons, the stories and memories shared with us from the elderly folks and just those great moments of "Wow, I wish I had a video camera to catch that on film." At the end of every day, I know that I have had several of these great moments that I didn't stop to enjoy and then I have the feeling of why?

NEW ARRIVAL

Let us all join in in welcoming Benjamin Russell Fitzpatrick to the world! Benjamin is the newborn son of Ian and Heather Fitzpatrick and is the new little brother to Rebecca, age 3. Benjamin was born on April 9, 2002 and weighed 7 lbs. 13 oz and was 19-3/4 ins. long.

Benjamin's grandparents are Rosemary and Edward Fitzpatrick of Green Valley, Ariz., formerly of Cohasset and Steven and Diane King of Halifax.

New dad Ian, who grew up in Cohasset and works here in town, now resides in Halifax with his family. Congratulations to all of you on the addition of baby Benjamin.

YARD SALE BENEFIT

The Beechwood Congregational Church is holding a yard sale this Saturday, May 4 from 8 a.m.-2 p.m. at 432 First Parish Road, a short distance from Scituate High School. Antiques, used furniture, baked goods as well as odds and ends will be sold. Come find a treasure!

THANK YOU, GEORGE

Did you happen to notice sparkling cars driving around Cohasset on Saturday? The Cohasset High School Baseball Boosters and hundreds of car owners owe a debt of gratitude to George Roukanakis at Olympic Citgo, at 55 Main St.. Although he is busy inspecting and repairing cars, as well as pumping gas or providing road service, he graciously donates the space, hose and water so that the baseball players could wash cars to raise money to benefit the team. Thank you, George from all those involved.

TRUE INSPIRATION

I wanted to start this week off by telling a story of a sweet little girl here in town. Miss Brooke Cummings recently had a hair cut with a whole lot of meaning. Brooke had 14 ins. of her hair cut off and donated the hair to be used for wigs for children going through cancer treatments. Brooke, you are a true inspiration to so many people and your new hair cut is so cute! You have done something that was so wonderful and you will remember it forever. We all commend you on this selfless and thoughtful act!

DEER HILL CAR WASH

If you missed that car wash, make sure to head to the Deer Hill School this coming Saturday, May 4 between the hours of 10 a.m.-2 p.m. This great day of washing is sponsored by the current fifth grade class to raise money for the popular Camp Bournedale trip that they will take as sixth-graders in September. Tickets are $5 per car and if you have not been sold a ticket by Saturday, you can get them on the day of the event.

Henry Builds a Cabin
Monday, May 6, 3:00 - 4:30 pm

"This is as fine a book as I have ever seen." – Daniel Pinkwater, NPR commentator

Based on short passages from the writing of Henry Thoreau, D. B. Johnson's books are extraordinary in their ability to interpret for children the views that have made Thoreau such an admired writer. Johnson's artwork is immediately appealing. His style is unique and vital, defined by the use of shapes and planes, along with his wonderful bear, Henry.

Copies of the award winning Henry Hikes to Fitchburg (Houghton Mifflin Company, $15.00) will also be available. Call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 to order your signed copy if unable to attend.

Sixth-grade girls' makeup draws too much attention

Flynn added the School Committee welcomes anyone who wants to air their opinions on the matter before the board.

"Part of our responsibility is to be a larger sounding board," Flynn said. "None of us have a problem with eliminating distractions, but if it happens too quickly we could create a bigger problem."

Flynn said schools are re-organized and the sixth grade goes into the middle school, the problem might resolve itself. By then, the pressure may not be on the girls to act as the oldest group in the school.

"It sounds like it just may be a peer pressure issue," Flynn said. "We just want to make sure we talk to everyone before changing a policy."

Adrienne MacCarthy, co-president of the Deer Hill PSO, said the organization was formed with the intent to bring parents' worries to the School Committee. She said the board voted to send a letter to address the issue so people on both sides could air their feelings.

"We are the mediators between the parents and the School Committee," MacCarthy said. "We want to facilitate the discussion to hopefully come to a resolution."

"I think makeup can be pretty excessive on sixth-grade young ladies."

Adrienne MacCarthy, PSO

MacCarthy stressed that the PSO is a neutral organization but said she would personally like to see the dress code updated to include some additions.

"I think makeup can be pretty excessive on sixth-grade young ladies," she said. "I don't know if school is an appropriate setting for that kind of dress."

MacCarthy said that the students are wearing all kinds of makeup, from eye-liner and eye-shadow, to lipstick and blush.

"I understand kids are maturing faster nowadays but their attire is not representative of their grade level," she said. "We're just trying to keep them at their age level."

Callahan said he knows he can't tell children what to wear but feels the makeup definitely serves as a distraction in the classes. He added altering the code to include a make-up cause could take the onus of responsibility off the parents. By being able to defer an explanation of why their children can't wear make-up to school to a handbook, parents may be able to avoid a confrontation.

"This might take the burden of the parents and place it on me," Callahan said. "I guess I don't mind being blamed."

What the dress code says

The following dress code statement appears on page 26 of the Deer Hill School handbook:

A student's appearance should reflect good health practices, safety, and decency as would be defined by the reasonable lay person. As such, clothing should not be a disturbing or distracting element to the learning process or pose a safety hazard to the student wearing it or others.

Of recent concern is the safety hazard posed by students carrying book bags to their classes. This matter has been left to the discretion of grade-level teams.

Students must wear laced sneakers (not slip-ons) for physical education classes. Baggy clothing and skirts are inappropriate attire during such classes. Clothing suitable to the activity and climate is encouraged, and all students are informed in advance of future activities.

Clothing and lunch bags should have the child's name on them so that the item can be returned to the owner..

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Play ball!

This week brings the crack of the bat at opening day on Barnes Field in Cohasset. Little leaguers, you now take your place with a long line of diamond cutters who date back to when, as legend has it, Gen. Abner Doubleday invented the game in the late 1800s. Baseball players are philosophers in cleats.

Just listen to what some baseball greats and not-so-greats have said about the American pastime, which was called "our game" by poet Walt Whitman.

"To be good, you gotta have a lot of little boy in you," said the immortal Dodgers catcher Roy Campanella.

"I lost 24 games my first year with the Mets. You've got to be a pretty good pitcher to lose that many. What manager is going to let you go out there that often?" said pitcher Roger Craig.

"A ball player's got to be kept hungry to become a big leaguer. That's why no boy from a rich family ever made the big leagues," said Yankee legend Joe DiMaggio, who inspired Simon and Garfunkel to say, "A nation turns its lonely eyes to you."

"Once I hit .291 and had to take a pay cut. If you hit .291 today, you'd own the franchise," said the great St. Louis Cardinals shortstop Enos Slaughter.

The colorful Yankees manager Casey Stengel had some jewels.

"They didn't give him a cake. They were afraid he'd drop it," he said of his weak-fielding first baseman, "Marvelous" Marv Thorneberry, on his birthday.

This is how Stengel described the pitching of the great Satchel Paige, whose motto was "don't look back": "He threw the ball as far from the bat and as close to the plate as possible."

Then there was Cleveland Indians player Matt Williams, who said in a locker room interview after winning Game 4 of the American League Championship Series, "Post season, perfect weather, great ball games... there's no place you'd rather be. We've got a saying going around here now. 'Surrender yourself to the moment. Become a part of it.'"

What exactly does that mean?" a reporter asked Williams.

"I have no idea," Williams replied. "It's way too heavy for me, but it's a kick in the pants, isn't it?"

The inimitable Yankee catcher Yogi Berra gave us such words of wisdom as "Ninety percent of the game is half mental," "It gets late early out there," "It's déjà vu all over again," "Next year, I want different uniforms that are the same," and (most famously) 'It ain't over 'til it's over."

Not only are baseball players funny, they're often superstitious.

There's the story that during baseball's early days, it was believed that seeing a truckload of empty barrels brought good luck.

A New York Giant player, Mike Donlin, spotted such a load before a game and had four hits that day. He mentioned his good luck to his manager, John McGraw, who said nothing, but saw to it that the same truckload of empty barrels passed the entrance to the Polo Grounds each morning until the Giants left home for a road trip. Donlin made more hits, and the Giants won 10 consecutive games.

This is what we hope for you this season, Little Leaguers.

You already have Roy Campanella's little boy (or girl) in you.

We wish you Joe DiMaggio's hunger for hits.

We wish you the .291 batting average of Enos Slaughter or more, no pay cut.

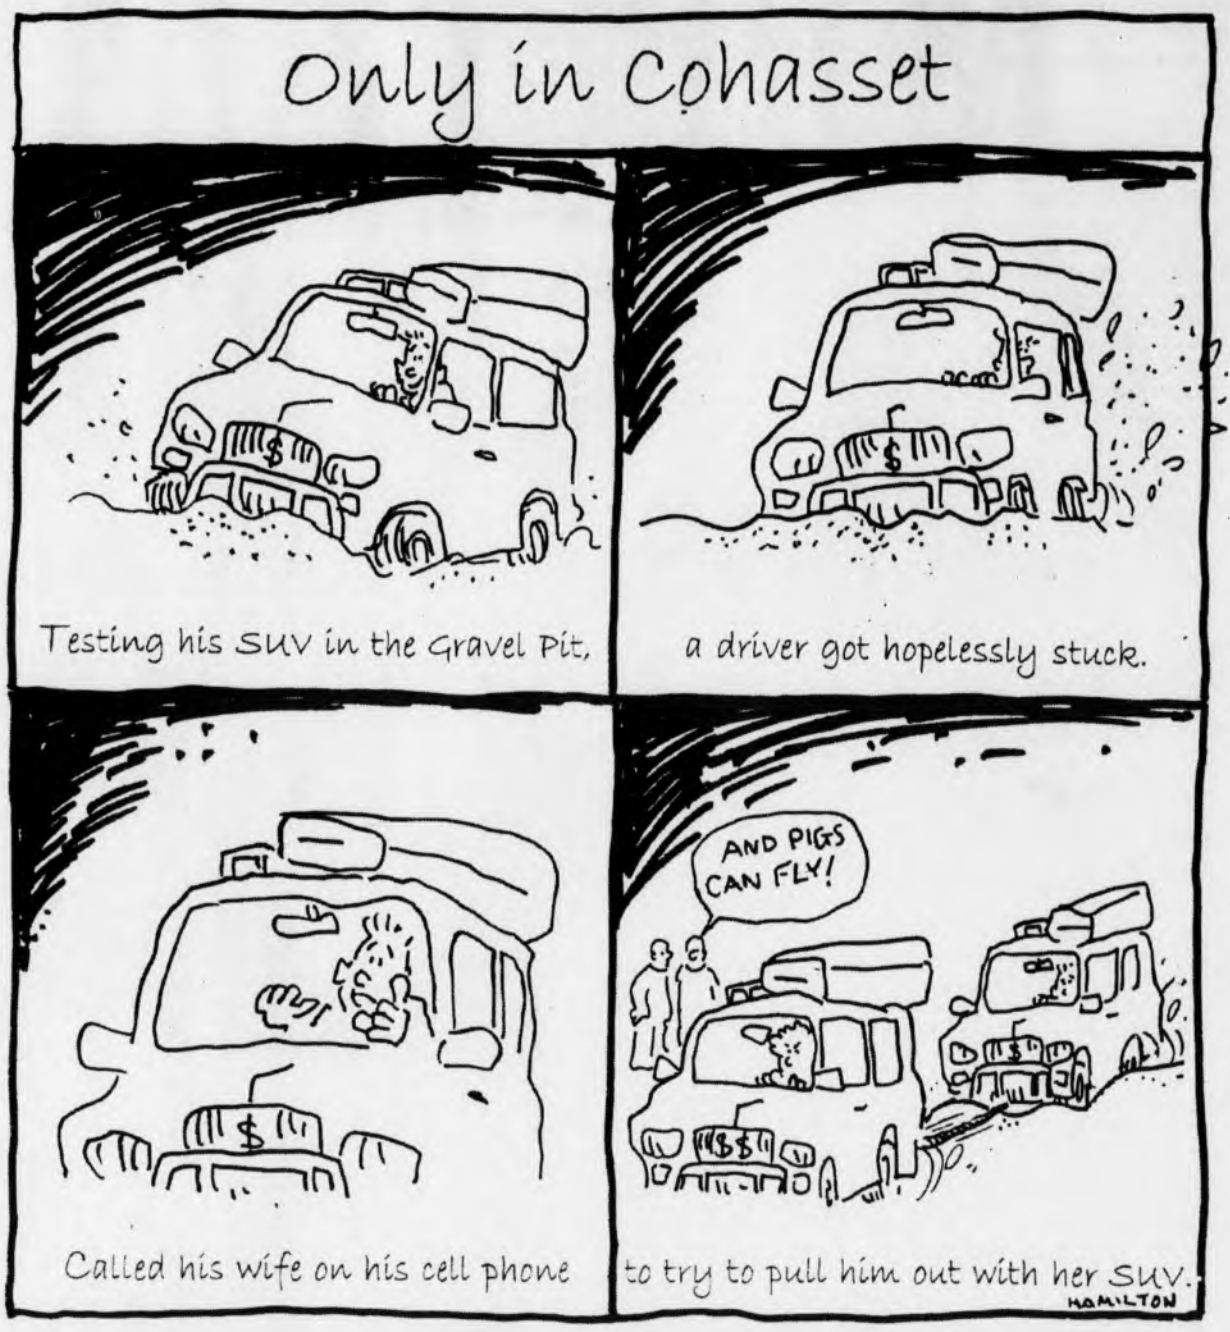
We wish you Satchel Paige pitches as far from the bat and as close to the plate.

We wish you the joy of "surrendering yourself to the moment" like Matt Williams.

We wish you the upbeat attitude of Yogi Berra, who once said, "I'm not in a slump. I just ain't hitting."

We wish you good luck.

And you don't even need to see Mike Donlin's truckload of empty barrels to get it.



Democrats elect officers

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee announces the election of new officers for the coming term. Agnes McCann, Chairman, and Pat Laugelle, Treasurer, were re-elected to their positions. Coleman Nee is now Vice Chairman of the Committee and Susan Kent is Secretary.

McCann observed, "with the large, enthusiastic turnout we had for the Democratic caucus, and the amount of interest in the upcoming state convention, we are looking forward to a very exciting year."

The next regularly scheduled meeting of the Town Committee will be held on Saturday, May 4 at 9 a.m. at Cohasset Town Hall. Tim Cahill, candidate for state Treasurer, is the scheduled guest and all interested voters are invited to attend. In a business meeting to follow, the Committee will hear the report of the scholarship committee and will also continue planning for the summer fundraiser, a giant yard sale to be held on June 15. For more information, please call Agnes McCann at 383-0222.

Fire dept. thanked

DEAR CHIEF LINCOLN:

We all feel very fortunate to live in Cohasset, a beautiful seaside town. But sometimes we take for granted all that this town has to offer. On Monday, April 22 we, at 100 Pond Street, were reminded how lucky we are to live in this community.

You and the men of your department arrived shortly after the 911 call was placed to report the fire in one of our units. No one knows how long the fire was smoldering, but it appears you arrived just in time. The men of your well-trained department were able to extinguish the fire in a relatively short time, but their efforts did not stop there. Careful checks were made to make sure the adjacent units were not in danger and steps were taken to protect the contents of the unit involved. From what I understand, your men stayed on the roof while it was sleeting until the gap in the roof was properly covered. Chief Lincoln, thank you for coming by the following day to check things out and follow through.

On behalf of the Board of Trustees and all the residents at 100 Pond Street, I wish to thank you and your men for your professional protection. We are most grateful that no one was hurt that day and that we have such a dedicated fire department.

DeeDee Perry
Chairman of the Board of Trustees
100 Pond Street

Officer commended

DEAR CHIEF JACKSON:

On behalf of the Board of Trustees and all the residents at 100 Pond Street, I wish to commend Officer Christy Tarantino on his prompt, professional and continuing response on Monday, April 22 when fire broke out at one of the units in our condominium complex. Officer Tarantino arrived just minutes after the 911 call was placed. He immediately took charge until the arrival of the fire department. He entered the unit involved and searched for signs of anyone within. When the fire department arrived, he stood by to offer assistance while letting them proceed.

We feel very fortunate that no one was injured on that day and that the damage, while substantial, was limited mainly to one unit. We appreciate having such an available and well trained police department.

Thank you to you and your men.

DeeDee Perry
Chairman of the Board of Trustees

COHASSET CARES

A walking tour of the RTF

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Well, Earth Day has come and gone, and fundamental changes have been occurring at the RTF. Capable and enthusiastic Carl Sestito is now at the DPW helm, with Charley and Chuck replacing Dickie Poland, who has finally retired after many years of working "like a machine," as a former employee once described Dickie. Thanks for those years of service, Dickie. Working at the RTF has never been easy, but you have to admit it's an interesting, active, and colorful place.

Newspapers and magazines go next as we turn the corner and face north.

Let's walk through the RTF as it is today. After faithful Larry checks your sticker, you pass the famous boutique on your right. Take it or leave it. Next is the shed for TVs and computers. These are $5 each as the hazardous elements in them have to be removed. Also used oil goes here [oil never wears out].

Next you will see the enclosed green dumpster for used office paper, 8-1/2 x 11, very valuable. Then the open metal bin for steel cans. [Coat hangers are usually welcomed by cleaning establishments.]

Now the roofed area for corrugated and other cardboard and brown bags. It's of course easier on the guys if we put all our little cardboard items inside a larger one. A significant change is that all plastics go in one box now, so no need to separate because of the new blue compactor. Plastic grocery bags still go in marked barrels.

Newspapers and magazines go next as we turn the corner and face north. To the left of that is the junk mail bin, where flattened waxed cartons go also [please cut out plastic spouts]. Then the glass building. Rinse please.

Turning the corner, we find the clothing bins, then the aluminum bin, then the returnable cans and plastic bottles for the Scouts. Then the largest bin, actually a huge roll-off dumpster, where the blue bags containing unrecyclable trash go.

Cohasset RECYCLING TRANSFER Facility
Cohasset grows to recycle everything

Outside the trash shed to the left is the metal bin, and to the left of that, the Construction and Demolition dumpster. No TVs or computers here, nor refrigerators or AC, LP tanks, batteries, gas cans, nor tires. See attendant for these items.

When allowable, brush goes next, down the road near the DPW garage. And finally, back up on the RTF property, is compost, leaves and grass clippings.

So there you have it. Our key to saving the earth. See you next time.

Master Plan workshop to finalize vision

MASTER PLAN

GROWTH & DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

The Cohasset Growth and Development Committee will hold a Vision and Goals workshop on Saturday, May 4 at 1 p.m. at Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave. All residents of Cohasset are encouraged to attend and give their input on the future of Cohasset. The Cohasset Selectmen appointed the Growth and Development Committee to help draft a town master plan to provide a thoughtful, consensus-driven strategy to manage town growth. Preservation of community character has been a strong theme at workshops, meetings and in survey results. Determining the actions required today, to preserve Cohasset's unique character for the future, is the primary challenge of the master planning process.

The Vision and Goals workshop will begin with a brief review of prior work, current planning efforts and the draft vision statement. Community Design Partnership, a planning and design firm based in Boston, will present their preliminary findings on items such as water supply, wastewater options, town finances, Greenbush, housing supply and affordability and commercial development. An analysis of land to be developed in Cohasset, prepared by the state's Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, will also be discussed

An interactive mapping exercise will help residents prioritize their ideas for preservation or change.

The workshop will break into small groups to help finalize a listing of assets and liabilities in major theme areas. An interactive mapping exercise will help residents prioritize their ideas for preservation or change. The wrap-up segment will provide an opportunity for small group reporting and sharing of ideas.

Next steps in the master planning process include forming monthly workgroups that will consider various scenarios for amount and type of growth. Please contact Liz Harrington, Town Planner, at 781-383-3517 if you would like to volunteer for a workgroup or for more information about the master plan.

Two new chairs at Town Hall

Sullivan, Flynn take the helm

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

There are two new chairmen on two of the most influential boards in Cohasset. One was elected last week as the new chairman of the School Committee and the other assumed his position early last month as the new point man for the Board of Selectmen.

While the two men serve on different boards, they have a lot in common.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan and School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn have know each other for almost 25 years. They attended each other's weddings and have been to numerous family occasions together. The connection: Flynn's wife's sister was Sullivan's wife's roommate in college.

"Who would have thought when we met in the 70s we'd both be chairing boards in Cohasset in the new millenium?"
— Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan

"It's kind of ironic we're both in these positions now," Sullivan said laughing. "Who would have thought when we met in the 70s we'd both be chairing boards in Cohasset in the new millenium?"

Sullivan is beginning his second stint as selectmen chairman, his first preceded the Town Manager Act that the town accepted more than five years ago. He also served on the Board of Health for four years.

He said being the chairman now is much different than it was before.

"We are far more strategically oriented these days," he said. "Before we would be in charge of all the personnel moves in town, we were more procedurally oriented."

However, Sullivan said being the chairman of the board still comes with added responsibility.

"It means your the point person for the press and for all public functions," he said. "You're often the one who is in charge of representing the town."

Sullivan said his goals are to keep the financial situation of the town under control. He said with the delay in state reimbursement for the school construction projects — the economic state of the town is the paramount issue right now.

"There's a lot up in the air," he said. "We have to be very in tune with what's going on and be very careful with how we spend our money."

Rick Flynn

Michael Sullivan

Sullivan lives on Gammons Road with his wife Mary, and his four children.

Flynn, who joined the school committee two years ago, said he is looking forward to his role as chairman. He said he has learned a lot about the town from serving on the Advisory Board for six years and feels prepared for the added responsibility.

"I know it's going to be a lot of work," he said. "But I'm up to it."

Flynn credits board members for forging a great working relationship with the town, a luxury the committee hasn't always enjoyed. He singled out Selectman Merle Brown for his work with the committee in bridging the gap.

"I want the board to continue to keep cooperating with other town boards," he said. "I think the spirit of openness is one that works well."

Flynn said one of his focuses as chairman will be to strive to limit class size as well as maximizing the number of teachers per classroom. He said he will also keep a close watch on the budget as he knows there is not much money to go around.

Flynn lives on Summer Street with his wife Andrea, and their three children.

It's the little stuff that counts

GOOD VIBES

BOB WHITNEY

A little at a time…

Should I go for the one big goal, big deal, big decision or should I take some small steps — claiming victory, success, enjoyment, the AA way, one day/moment at a time?

I have struggled with this rather daunting question— big versus small. How can I answer; how should I answer, where do I look?

First of all, I have more than 30 years of experience as an adult, professionally and personally, so I have done a "lot of things" that would shed some wisdom on this important question. Here are some things I do know that may help:

- Putting one foot in front of the other, moving ahead one day at a time. Measure progress against the past.
- I know all about having some fun, being useful (contributing), using each day well. It's a great feeling…
- The great sense of satisfaction experienced when you help those less fortunate.
- Patience, courage and discipline are three great character traits of truly successful people.

I am convinced, after observing others and through my own personal experiences, that the winning formula is making each day a bit better, a bit more productive, slightly more fun than it was yesterday. Progress against the past.

Given these statements, it should be clear that I favor doing the "small" which means that I can do things just slightly better, faster, cleaner or with a bit more "style," knowing that over time, things will work out just fine.

It means that saving just a little bit each month for 30 years is a small price to pay for something that could be worth millions.

It means that successful people complete assignments slightly faster, slightly more accurate, more effectively than others. Even if I don't know the art of the big deal, the big secret of living — the magic bullet — I can do things that I understand and can trust that these things unique to me will make a difference!

What I can do is make my bed each day, kiss my wife, eat well, return phone calls, say "thank you," pay my bills timely, read, exercise. I can encourage people, smile, laugh, listen — be kind — simple things that if followed routinely, can add meaning and purpose to living.

The difference between highly successful people (significance) and others, is very small. People call it luck, timing, whatever — I call it paying a little more attention, more discipline, a little more clarity about where they spend their time, the ability to see what others cannot. These people tell the truth, practice humility, listen and learn from others and strive to do well. They keep appointments, practice generosity and enjoy a big laugh.

The key is not the big deal, hit the lottery, winning the "genius" label. It's doing right things, good things, in the right way each and every day. I can think of Cal Ripken who did the right thing, each day during his career and soon he will enter the ultimate — the Hall of Fame — just for being there every day!

So I encourage you, today, right now, do one thing that makes a small difference and if you like it, do it over and over and over. It's not about the big stuff — it's the little stuff that makes the difference.

Oh those crawfish!

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

This is a big weekend in the bayou town of Breaux Bridge, Louisiana.

It's time for the annual Crawfish Festival, which has been held on the first weekend in May for the past 32 years in the heart of Cajun country.

I am told that visitors to the three-day affair have been known to eat up to 15,000 pounds of crawfish, or crayfish, as Larousse calls them, either boiled or in a dish called "etouffee" washed down with beer while watching the crawfish races and listening to Zydeco bands.

I have never eaten a crawfish even though they are said to taste like shrimp and resemble fresh water lobsters that never made it to puberty.

The native Cajuns call them "mud bugs," which is probably why I have never managed to digest one.

In the course of traveling around the country, with some exceptions, I think I've tried all the local specialty foods, up to and including broiled buffalo steak in the Buffalo Park Café in Fort Smith in Canada's Northwest Territory. It tastes like venison.

I am told that visitors to the three-day affair have been known to eat up to 15,000 pounds of crawfish.

The best by far was the she-crab soup in Charleston, S. C. It's called that because the flavor is enhanced by she-crab eggs, which is missing in he-crabs. During a week in Charleston, I think I had she-crab soup for lunch and dinner — and breakfast, if it were available.

A local paean for she-crab soup goes like this:

"A soup to remember!
"The feminine gender
"Of crabs is expedient —
"The secret ingredient.
"The flavor essential
"Make men reverential
"Who taste this collation
"And cry acclamation."

On the other hand, there are foods that I have tried and will never try again, like squid, which is disguised with onion, garlic and bay leaf, numbed with white wine, and sold in otherwise respectable Italian restaurants under the pseudonym of calamari. It still has the consistency of a garden hose.

Chance brought me one day to a place in the heart of the Pennsylvania Dutch country, which gave me an opportunity to try a local favorite called "scrapple." Fortunately, I checked the recipe before ordering.

"Separate one hog's head into halves," it began. "Remove and discard the eyes and brains . . ." By this time I had lost my appetite. I almost became a vegetarian on the spot.

The only thing worse that I have never tried is something called "haggis," which I am informed is the national dish of Scotland. It's so beloved of Scots everywhere that Bobby Burns even wrote a poem, "To A Haggis." Now I understand why a Scotsman wears kilts.

The recipe for haggis goes something like this:

"Take a sheep's stomach, clean thoroughly and turn inside out. Take the sheep's heart, liver and lungs and boil for a half an hour in salt water. Mince. . . ." Well, you get the idea. Incidentally, the traditional drink with haggis is whiskey. I understand that, too.

Maybe I'll give crawfish another chance, after all.

HEALTH NOTES

The good and bad news on osteoporosis

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Osteoporosis is a major public health threat for 28 million Americans. Here are some facts:

- Eighty percent of people with osteoporosis are women. A woman's risk of hip fracture is equal to her combined risk of breast, uterine, and ovarian cancer.
- Two million men have osteoporosis and another 3 million are at risk for the disease. Despite the large number of men affected, osteoporosis in men remains under diagnosed, underreported, and inadequately researched.
- Nearly half of all Americans over age 75 are affected by osteoporosis.
- Nine out of ten hip fractures are associated with osteoporosis.
- The direct medical costs for osteoporosis and associated bone fractures amount to $14 billion each year$38 million each day! And these costs continue to increase.

Osteoporosis is preventable

- Building strong bones before the age of 30 can be the best defense against developing osteoporosis.
- Exercise: Walk 20 minutes a day. Take the stairs rather than the elevator for just a few floors.
- Eat Right: Calcium and Vitamin D are vital to good home health. Sources of calcium are milk, cheese, other milk products and dark green leafy vegetables.
- Postmenopausal women need to consult their physician about estrogen replacement therapy.
- More than half of total bone mass is achieved during adolescent growth. It is never too soon to start thinking about osteoporosis!

Abandoned septic systems

Recently, the Board of Health received a letter requesting permission to disregard the state Department of Environmental Protection Title 5 requirements to abandon and fill the septic tank with sand when connecting to the sewer and, in stead, use the tank's capacity to collect water from a sump pump. Since this is a common question, and quite reasonable, it's probably a good idea to respond to it publicly.

The reason that Title 5 requires septic tanks to be filled is to ensure that the below-ground cavity ceases to become a potential hazard in the event of its collapse, or from contamination from fecal matter entering the water table through leaks in the tank, overflows, etc. There is no way to easily determine the condition of the tank and its ability to provide reliable service in any other proposed application, with one exception: A tank in good condition with no leaks may be used to serve as an overflow container for effluent from a low pressure sewer connection which uses a grinder pump. Both the Board of Health and the Sewer Commission have sample designs for such a hookup. The Board of Health must approve the plan for each system design.

The board believes these regulations are reasonable. A much simplified and very approximate example will give some insight as to why. Consider that a property owner has a house the footprint for which is 30X60 feet. His roof drains go into a system, which carries the water to the street. One inch of rainfall will permit that system to collect 150 gallons of water and send it to the town's catch basin on that street. Assume a 900-gallon septic tank. Three inches of rain will fill the tank. Assume the leaching field attached to the septic system is perfect and meets Title 5. Depending on the number of bedrooms for which it was designed; it can absorb only 440 gallons of water per day (three bedrooms). However, Health Board estimates are that 90 percent of the undisputed systems in town don't meet Title 5. It seems reasonable for the Board to refuse to permit building a system, which, after rainfall of over 4 or 5 inches will cause the owner's lawn to become a wetland.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

There are chihuahuas and dachshunds, dobermans and fox hounds. There are Irish wolfhounds and Jack Russell terriers, lhasa apsos and even one old English sheepdog.

There are two Australian shepherds in town, Ally and Ashley, dogs defined by being easy going, perpetual puppies that love to play. According to a dog-breeding Web site, the animals are courageous, loyal and affectionate, and are excellent children's companions that are great with active children.

Don't be fooled by Molly, the only schipperke in town. This is a big dog in a little dog's body. The schipperke are quick, energetic little dogs which are hot-tempered, high-spirited, self-confident and protective.

There is one bull mastiff in town, named Brady, who lives on North Main Street. These dogs are a devoted, alert guard dog, with a good-natured temperament, though they tend to be willful. They are docile unless provoked, fearless and protective, yet affectionate.

Two cockapoos, Henry and Peanut, live in town . These dogs have faces that resemble both the poodle and the American cocker spaniel. The cockapoo is good with children and are easy to obedience train.

Doc Sanders, the lone great pyrenees in town, lives on Highland Avenue. The great pyrenees is a capable and imposing guardian, devoted to its family, and somewhat wary of strangers — human or canine. It is described as courageous, very loyal, and obedient.

Angel, the town's only pit bull, lives on Pleasant Street. By no means are these dogs people-haters or people-eaters. Their natural aggressive tendencies are directed toward other dogs and animals, not people. However if they are properly socialized they will not even be aggressive with them. According to dog breeders, these dogs are truly quality companions for quality owners only.

However, while dogs can provide hours, if not years of joy to their owners, they can also cause some headaches.

According to Murphy, families don't always realize the large responsibility that comes with owning a pet.

"It's worse than having a kid," Murphy said. "You have to adhere to all of the control laws."

Some of the rules and regulations in place for the dogs in town include a "pooper scooper" law which mandates an owner pick up a dog's feces after it relieves itself. The law also states that dogs are not allowed to defecate on town-owned land, such as the common.

"We just can't have dogs going to the bathroom all over town," Murphy said. "There are so many people that use the common, no one wants their kid stepping in anything."

The fine for the first infraction of the law is $25 , but it increases incrementally with each offense.

The town also requires that a dog be under its owner's control at all times — meaning that it must be leashed or closely supervised. An owner must ensure that his canine does not disturb the neighborhood by barking, or being a general nuisance.

"We try to cover all the bases," Murphy said.

According to the Town Clerk's office, there is usually about a 10 percent turnover in the number of dogs in town each year. All dogs must be licensed, which entails bringing a copy of their rabies vaccination to the office. If a dog is spayed or neutered, the license fee is reduced from $15, to $7.

Licenses must be renewed every year, and applications are mailed out with the census. Failure to respond to the mailing draws a $10 fine.

Murphy said while he can't be certain every dog in town is licensed, those who aren't will eventually be caught.

"It's like driving a car without a license," Murphy said. "One day you're going to get nabbed, and it's going to be worse than if you would've just done the right thing."

Chamber chorus hosts 'wedding'

The weekend of May 4 and 5, the Broad Cove Chorale women's chamber chorus offers a quasi-theatrical event with the audience participating as guests at a Broad Cove "wedding."

The first half of the concert the audience sits in the church proper listening to gorgeous wedding ceremony music; then the action heats up in the second half with wedding cake and libations while a band accompanies the group to up-tempo jazz and old favorites at the "reception."

Saturday's concert is at 8p.m. at the Second Congregational Church at Cohasset Common,

Ways to help offset the budget deficit

YOUR REP

GARRETT BRADLEY

Over the next two weeks, we in the House of Representatives will be debating proposals for increasing revenue and amendments to the Fiscal Year 2003 budget that was recently released. As you may have read, the budget contains $1.5 billion in cuts and $500 million in "rainy day" fund reserves to close a projected $2.0 billion revenue shortfall. The House of Representatives is considering many different proposals to raise revenue to close this $1.5 billion gap.

As your state representative, I feel it is my responsibility to let you know what steps I will support to successfully deal with the fiscal challenges facing our Commonwealth. I would also like to let you know that the proposals I support may differ greatly from the budget ultimately passed by the State Legislature.

I do not support freezing the tax roll back. The residents of Massachusetts voted overwhelmingly for the tax cut, and just as I have supported the Clean Elections law for the same reason, I will not override the will of the voters and their clear intentions on these issues. Our current fiscal crisis calls for a mix of budget cuts and targeted increases in revenue. Our budget is $21.8 billion, and I believe we should start the process by looking for ways to eliminate waste wherever possible. In addition, I would consider increasing revenue by doing the following:

1.Utilizing the unused portion of this year's tobacco settlement fund. Although we have been able to save this money in past years, it is preferable, given our current fiscal state, to use these funds rather than raise taxes. This money would close the budget gap by $146 million.

2.Giving serious consideration to the Governor's proposal to reduce payouts from the Lottery. This proposal, coupled with legislation that would allow the Lottery to once again advertise, would close the budget gap by an estimated $247 million without endangering local aid.

3. Increasing the cigarette tax by 75 cents. This is the only tax increase that I am supporting, and I do so because of the direct correlation that smoking has to health care. With Medicaid projected to be 30 percent of our budget in five years, this tax increase would help offset the cost and close our current budget gap by $180 million.

4. Charging prisoners $5 per day for the cost of their care. This proposal has been floating around the Statehouse for some time and would help close the budget gap by $18 million.

5. Placing video gaming machines at the four existing racetracks in our Commonwealth. It is important to note that these facilities are already conducting gaming activities. Adding the machines would close the budget gap by $380-$400 million.

6. Implementing a tax amnesty program to allow individuals who are delinquent in their taxes to pay without penalty. This program would help close the budget gap by an estimated $30-$50 million.

The proposals outlined above would generate more than $1 billion to help close the Fiscal '03 budget gap ($1.5 billion after using $500 million in reserves) without freezing the tax roll back or implementing arbitrary tax increases. These proposals, combined with prudent budget cuts and $500 million from the rainy day fund, would protect important programs such as those in our schools, including the school building assistance program, public safety and local aid packages.

While I will work hard to support these proposals during the budget process, I cannot be certain that they will ultimately be included in the final budget. I know that these cuts are painful and that is why I felt that it was important for you to know where I stand and what I have proposed as a solution to address many of our current fiscal challenges.

As always, I look forward to your input on these proposals as well as on other issues facing the State Legislature. Please feel free to contact me at the Statehouse (617) 722-2120 or at my home (781) 740-3127.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley represents the Third Plymouth District consisting of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

SBAB legislation in works

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund and Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, along with 50 other members of the House and Senate, have sponsored legislation relative to the School Building Assistance Program. Across the Commonwealth, school construction projects face an uncertain future due to a recent Administrative Advisory released by the Department of Education which warned that the DOE will no longer be able to provide assurances or any time frame to cities and towns that are awaiting state funding for school construction projects. The Department of Education had previously been able to guarantee that communities on the waiting list would receive funding within a certain period of time, usually 3-4 years.

Therefore, cities and towns face a difficult uncertainty, which may prevent them from being able to plan their local budgets accordingly. This uncertainty may force some districts to postpone school building projects or seek alternative ways to cover costs as they await state money. This legislation will ensure that communities receive funding within 10 years if they are on the waiting list. In addition, it safeguards cities and towns across the Commonwealth, protecting them financially until the state is able to begin reimbursement.

The legislation caps the number of projects on the list at 250 projects, currently there are 236 projects on the list, and the DOE has awarded 254 grants over the past five years. Furthermore, it requires that starting in the Fiscal Year 2004 at least 25 projects must be funded per year from the Approved Funding List and a number equal to the number funded must be taken from the Pre-Approved funding list and placed on the Approved List. This legislation ensures that cities and towns receive funding from the state within a certain period of time, not longer than 10 years, if their school project has been selected and placed on the list, thus, communities will be able to financially plan properly.

Hedlund and Bradley are also sponsors of House Bill 4901, which allows municipalities to borrow money for up to ten years, therefore safeguarding them if the state does not begin reimbursing within five years. Currently, a city or town may be approved for a short-term loan for a period of five years, pursuant to state law for a school building project. Municipalities initially pay for these projects with borrowed money in anticipation of state reimbursement. The problem is if the waiting period for reimbursement exceeds five years, the community will have to pay the interest and the principal on the loan, which could create a serious financial problem for the city or town.

Historic parish house to undergo changes

Parish House project to begin

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Renovations to the First Parish House on N. Main Street began in earnest this past weekend as it celebrated the beginning with a ground-breaking ceremony.

Eric Kluz, chairman of the parish committee, said the expansion of the building is long overdue. The construction will add new classrooms to the building as well as a refurbished nursery school and an upgrading of the overall facility.

The current project also calls for the construction of a new community hall and kitchen along with the added classrooms, an entry hall and a gallery. The estimated cost for the construction is $750,000 which the church has raised through private donations.

"The building was in dire need of repair," Kluz said. "It's going to be much more efficient once the construction is completed."

Chairman of the Building Committee Josiah Stevenson said the building will be much better laid out once the construction is complete. He's glad the building process in finally underway.

"I'm very relieved," Stevenson said. "I had a fear that we were going to end up doing nothing but painting the walls but we ended up getting a great building."

The repairs, slated to be finished in September, will alter one of the most historic buildings in town. According to historical documents provided by the church, the Unitarian Parish House was built in 1721 for Nehemiah Hobart, the first minister of the church.

Dubbed the Nehemiah Hobart House, it served as the setting for discussions of religious, civil, and political issues, which influenced the emergence of democracy in town.

The building changed hands many times in the coming years, the first in 1759 when the Reverend John Browne purchased the house. During Browne's ministry, he felt the need for a bigger meetinghouse (church) and so the original one was dismantled during his tenure and a new one built to take its place.

Apparently, Browne was an ardent patriot and after a town vote, he allowed a closet in the meetinghouse to be used to deposit muskets and gunpowder in case of a British attack. He also allowed the town militia to meet and conduct drills at his home.

According to the informational packet distributed by the First Parish Church, Governor John Hancock, while visiting Cohasset, was known to have met in the living room of the house to discuss the Revolution with Browne. Browne was the one who read the Declaration of Independence to the town from the meetinghouse steps.

After Browne died, the building passed through various hands before the Reverend Joseph Osgood moved in during1842. Osgood lived in the Nehemiah Hobart House with his family for the 56 years of his ministry. Osgood was not only an important fixture in the church, he also was a contributing member of the community serving on the School Committee for 26 years and as Superintendent for 12. It was Osgood who ended the use of corporal punishment in the town's schools.

Years later, in 1915 the First Parish congregation, in need for a place to meet for social occasions and community activity, purchased the building from Osgood's heirs. From that time until the present, the building has belonged to the church and has served the community to the best of its ability.

In 1943, the church allowed the Parish hall to be opened every Saturday night for "some entertainment for the boys." Essentially this provided a place for soldiers serving in World War II to gather. The home also served as a temporary home for a family, which was displaced by the conflicts in Europe.

Another round of renovations began under the Reverend Roscoe Trueblood's ministry, which began in 1945. In 1960 the house was renovated and enlarged to include bathrooms, a kitchen, anterooms, and a social hall.

The building is still an integral part of the community, it has been used by Alcoholics Anonymous for decades and, beginning in the early 60s and continuing for more than 30 years volunteers from all of the Cohasset churches rotated serving lunches to the town's senior citizens every week.

More recently, in 1989 a "home share" apartment was created from a classroom and a large storage closet on the second floor of the Parish house. It served as a shelter for 17 homeless families in its first ten years.

Preserving uncommon common is a priority

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Along with the changes on the town common that can be attributed to the renovations on the First Parish Church, there may be more on the way.

The Cohasset Common Historic District Commission held a workshop last week to air recommendations for changes to the historic plot of land. The group offered up nine recommendations to the almost 40 people who attended the event.

Although there were differing views on the plans set before them, Town Planner Liz Harrington said there was a consensus on at least one item.

"I heard a strong message that everyone wanted to bury the utility wires on the common."
— Town Planner Liz Harrington

"I heard a strong message that everyone wanted to bury the utility wires on the common," Harrington said.

Harrington said while the issue of what, if anything, to do with the common isn't specifically addressed by the master plan it could very well be incorporated.

"If it turn's out this is one of the town's priorities, we will take a look at it," she said. "They are only in the planning and design stages so when they move along, we'll examine it closer."

All of the recommendations at the meeting were in an effort to create a larger town common, rather than the current one which is split into many pieces. Harrington said the idea of planting more trees in the area drew some of the most support.

Some of the specific ideas include replacing Long Road, which is next to First Parish Church, with a walking path to create a continuity of the common.

Another recommendation was to eliminate the parking on the common side of North Main Street and allow it only on the opposite side. This would improve the view of the church, town hall and the overall appearance of the green. There was also a proposal to narrow North Main Street by four feet to slow traffic and eliminate fast moving cars.

The planning process is expected to take some time and historic commission members say they encourage residents' input on the matter. There will be future meetings held to discuss the plans.

Anyone interested in reviewing the plans can contact Harrington at 781-383-3517.

Master planning to get down to business

Workshop is Saturday

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

This Saturday, residents will have an opportunity to voice their opinions on a document that could shape Cohasset for the next 20 years.

The master plan's vision statement which has been drafted from many meetings, neighborhood forums and a survey conducted last fall, reflects the hopes of Cohasset residents for the future. While the vision statement has been drafted, its implementation is up for discussion. From 1-4 p.m., May 4, residents will have an opportunity to review the plan and ask questions.

"We're hoping to finalize the vision statement," said Town Planner Liz Harrington. "It's critical we have the broadest range of input possible."

Harrington went on to say that the key to making the master plan process work is having it based on a consensus of the population.

"This is the interesting part," she said. "We're finally getting down to details and dealing with specific issues."

At the workshop this weekend, Harrington hopes to be able to make recommendations for tradeoffs in the master plan. This includes weighing what the town can afford against what types of services Cohasset's residents expect.

"It's critical we have the broadest range of input possible."
— Liz Harrington, Town Planner

"It's a difficult process," Harrington said. "There is going to be a lot of discussion and a lot of give and take."

The master plan has a number of specific components to address including a goals and policy statement, land-use analysis, housing market analysis, economic development, natural and cultural resources, open space and recreation, service and facilities, and traffic/circulation/transportation.

Harrington said the plan is firmly grounded in Cohasset character and values as has been articulated by the community.

"We drafted the vision statement from the input we got from the residents," she said. "Now we need their help in refining it."

Last week, Harrington presented the vision statement to the selectmen who discussed it for some time. While taking issues with some of the items in the statement, the selectmen agreed that there should not be one single issue, or special interest group, that is the driving force behind the process.

"The master plan is about developing a consensus and should not be driven by one group of people," said Selectman Ronnie McMorris.

For more on the workshop, see page 9.

Little League parade heralds the season

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Along with the smell of cut grass and the shedding of wool sweaters, another rite of spring is upon us.

The Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball Association will hold its annual opening day parade Saturday, May 4, causing Little Leaguers in town to start practicing their swings and breaking in their gloves.

"It's a great kick off to the summer."

— Mark DeGiacomo, youth baseball association

Cohasset Youth Baseball players parade down North Main Street on opening day a year ago in May 2001. This year's season officially opens Saturday.

As in years past, coaches and players will gather between the Red Lion Inn and the Citgo Station at about 8 a.m. The parade will kick off soon thereafter proceeding along South Main Street through the village and down North Main Street to Barnes Field. The group of ballplayers will be escorted by the Deer Hill School Band who will also play the national anthem at the event. Once at the field, the scores kids will watch as the opening ceremonies are conducted.

According to Mark DeGiacomo, president of the association, there are plenty of events planned that morning.

One of the highlights of the event will be the presentation of a championship banner and individual awards to last year's nine-year-old all-star team that won the district tournament. The team, which competes over the summer, will watch its banner raised on the outfield fence.

"It's a thrill for the kids," DeGiacomo said. "They deserve it."

Another award that DeGiacomo will be handing out is the Leo J. Fiori award, presented to the Little League parent, who made an outstanding contribution to the organization.

"It's a great kick off to the summer," he said.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, will throw out the ceremonial first pitch and the Rev. Gary Ritts will give the invocation. Bradley said he would be happy to defer to Mary Jeanette Murray, the former state representative who made a tradition out of throwing out the first pitch, if she wanted the honor. Murray lives on Margin Street and has been a familiar figure on opening day over the years.

"This is good for the kids and good for the community," Bradley said. "I'm flattered to be asked to throw out the first pitch."

DeGiacomo said he is sure the subject of the new ball fields will be broached at some point during the ceremony. He said he hopes by this time next year, the parade will be making its way to the two new fields for a ribbon cutting ceremony. He added that the groundwork for the fields should be completed by June 30 but maintenance issues, such as growing grass for it will delay the opening till next spring.

"They're going to be fantastic," he said about the fields. "It will be a source of pride for town."

DeGiacomo said the fields are important for all it will provide for the youth in town.

"Not only do kids learns our national pastime, they learn teamwork and get to have a lot of fun as well," he said.

The fields are funded by a partnership between Little League and the town. At last month's Town Meeting, residents approved an appropriation of $300,000, $100,000 of which came from the Community Preservation Fund, to go along with the $150,000 donated by Little League.

DeGiacomo said that despite the competition from other sports such as soccer and lacrosse, the league's enrollment is a high as it has ever been. With 34 teams and more than 400 kids, there will be plenty of action on the base paths.

There are four divisions in which the children can compete with the competitors ages ranging from four to 12-years of age..

"We teach the children about baseball so whether they go on to compete at higher levels or not, they can always enjoy the game," he said.

Conservation leadership award nominations sought

The Wildlands Trust of Southeastern Massachusetts is seeking nominations for the LeBaron Briggs Conservation Leadership Award and the Municipal Leadership Award. These awards are given each year to an individual and a town that have shown exemplary conservation leadership. Nominations must be received by May 7.

A recipient of this award is someone who has been a leader in a successful effort to conserve land. This award is named for Wildlands Trust founder and stalwart conservationist LeBaron Briggs of Plymouth. LeBaron Briggs and his family and neighbors, with Briggs' leadership, unselfishly donated hundreds of acres in Plymouth for conservation to the Wildlands Trust and The Nature Conservancy.

A recipient of this award is someone who has been a leader in a successful effort to conserve land.

The Wildlands Trust began giving this award in 1998. Previous recipients of this award include Mark Rasmussen, executive director of the Coalition for Buzzards Bay, for his leadership in Buzzards Bay area land conservation; a couple who donated more than $1 million for a conservation purchase; a landowner who donated a major piece of land to conservation, and Mary McFadden and Larry Stifler of Wareham for leading a citizen campaign to save land on Indian Neck.

The Municipal Conservation Leadership Award is given to a municipality that has been a leader in protecting open space in Southeastern Massachusetts. This can include completion of a major open space purchase, use of innovative zoning to save significant open space or working with other towns or the state on open space protection. Outstanding work under the Community Preservation Act may qualify.

The Wildlands Trust began giving this award in 2000. Previous recipients of this award include the town of Kingston, for numerous successful Self-Help Program land acquisitions, and the town of Bridgewater, for buying a key parcel on the Taunton River.

Awards will be presented during The Wildlands Trust Annual Meeting Saturday, June 8, at the Capt. David Cushman, Jr. Preserve, in Duxbury. Nominations must be received by May 7.

Nominations must include:

- your name, address and phone number.
- nominee's name, address and phone number
- name of town nominee, include name of primary contact
- Please write in 200 words or less why the individual or town should receive the award.

E-mail to: jschultz@wildlandstrust.org; fax: 781-934-8110; Mail: Wildlands Trust, Attn. Jessica Schultz, P.O. Box 2282, Duxbury, 02331.

The Wildlands Trust of Southeastern Massachusetts is a non-profit land trust founded in Plymouth in 1973. The Wildlands Trust is dedicated to land conservation and the preservation of the natural heritage of Southeastern Massachusetts and currently protects 3,700 acres of land in 22 communities throughout the region.

Déjà vu all over again

Hingham Tops Cohasset boys in state finals rematch.

Returning to Hingham High for the first time since last June's Division 2 state final, Cohasset gave up two early goals, then played the Harbormen even for 47 minutes, but it wasn't enough.

The Skippers took their second loss of the season, falling to the state champs 6-3 in a physical, hard-fought contest that was the first of what could be three meetings this year.

Cohasset, now 7-2 on the season (3-2 in Pilgrim Conference play), got outstanding games from senior goalie Kyle Weber and defensemen Chris Caron, Ben Lynner and Nick Spirito. Weber, who would finish with 11 saves – several of which were exceptional – held Hingham to its second-lowest goal total of the season (they had scored four against

Lady laxers get revenge on Sandwich to improve to .500

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset girls lacrosse program evened its record to the magic .500 mark this week with a big win over Sandwich, playing at home on Tuesday.

Cohasset had never beaten Sandwich, losing to them seven times in the program's six year history – the most recent two losses ones that are no doubt etched in the minds of many of this year's players as well as this team's followers: the 17-3 thumping Sandwich delivered in the 2001 regular season and the loss they handed the Skippers a few weeks later to knock them out of the State Tournament in the first round.

However, the Sandwich graduated a majority of its South Sectional finalist team from a year ago, which allowed the local lady laxers to exact a little revenge, as well as a huge 10-6 win.

"We needed this one," said first year lax coach Torin Sweeney. "This was a big win for us even though it's still early."

Sweeney explained that he wants his Lady Skippers to keep their record floating around the .500 mark if they are to make a run for their third straight playoffs. A loss on Tuesday would have dropped Cohasset to 2-4, but they now stand at 3-3, with games at Mansfield on Thursday and home against Scituate, Friday night at 7pm.

As is so often the case, the Skippers were led by senior captain Kristin Sheerin, who paced her team with five goals, three coming in a decisive flurry midway through the second half that made the score 9-4.

Junior attacker Sera Genovese pitched in two goals, giving her a total of four in her two games played since returning from an injury.

Junior defenseman Katherine Coyne and sophomore forward Nicole Turgiss had single tallies

10-year old Cohasset-Scituate baseball team to play in Cooperstown tourney

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

You know the ageless baseball one-liner go— How do you get to Cooperstown? The answer: practice, practice, practice.

Well, every Sunday morning, a dozen starry eyed 10-year olds from Cohasset and Scituate get together with coach Ralph Berry to practice at Cohasset's Milliken Field, knowing for certain that a trip to Cooperstown will be their reward.

These two hours are in addition to the time these 12 young athletes spend practicing and playing with their respective Little League teams. This junket to baseball's hometown planned by coach Berry and his 12 hand picked ballplayers for the National Invitational Tourney is 100 percent non-affiliated and privately funded.

So does all this baseball get a little overwhelming?

"No way," said star pitcher Robby McCunney, of Cohasset, looking at the reporter as if he'd just sprouted a second head. " I never get sick of baseball. And I'm really looking forward to this."

Indeed. Despite the shortness in years of McCunney and his teammates, there seems to be across the board appreciation of just how special a trip to Cooperstown is.

John Maher, a first baseman from Cohasset, seems as excited about visiting the Baseball Hall of Fame as he does playing against top caliber competition from all over the nation. He says he's looking forward most of all to learning more about Ted Williams. Apparently, his father, Mike Maher, an assistant coach with the team, has regaled him with a few of his own childhood memories of the Splendid Splinter.

McCunney, Maher and the rest of their third and fourth grade teammates who make up the "Cohasset Cobras"— Jodi Rosano, Jordan Berry, Graham Stevenson, Justin Yaeger, Todd Emmanuello, Andy McKenna, Torrey Proctor, Matt Sheehan and John Giuggio — will be leaving for New York shortly after school lets out, with play in the 64 team National Invitational Tourney running from June 15-21.

The games will actually be played at the Major League Baseball com-

Tennis teams storm past Crusaders

Wins recorded by both girls and boys teams over SSL rival Carver

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Both the boys and girls tennis teams were able to win the only matches they played in this past rain-laden week, beating both Carver teams.

For the boys, this was a confidence building victory, as they took down the Crusaders for their first league victory of the year. After season opening losses to the SSL muscle in Norwell and Mashpee (a combined 18-4 in last year's regular season), the Skippers regrouped to take this one 3-2.

Sophomore Tim Anton won his second match of the season, improving his South Shore League record to 2-1. Fighting the powerful winds, Anton ripped Carver junior Jim Paradise at second singles, 6-0, 6-0.

After a brief stint at first doubles, junior Ross Lieb-Lappen moved back to his normal position at third singles and won a critical two-set match.

Taking the first set easily, 6-0, Lappen was able to stave off a late second set comeback to take the match-clincher, 7-5.

The second doubles pair of sophomores Andrew Wise and Drew Hertig came up big in winning their first matches as varsity players. Their 6-3, 6-4 victory over Carver's freshman duo provided the only other point the team needed to capture the match.

Cohasset split the season series with Carver last year, but the Crusaders graduated their SSL All-Star number one Russell Crooks, who now plays at Stoneham College.

On the girls side, Cohasset beat Carver in much the same way they have beaten the rest of the league besides Norwell: 5-0.

Junior captain Lindsay Grossman set the tone for the match at first singles, winning easily, 6-1, 6-3. Sophomore Holly Graham returned to second singles, taking her match in much the same fashion, 6-1, 6-1.

Sophomore Corey Evans, who usually sees time at first and second doubles, played a very steady match at third singles for a 6-1, 6-2 win.

Junior Julie Shea and freshman Kate Englander continued their undefeated record as a pair, with a dominating showing at 6-2, 6-0.

MIKE SPELLMAN

There has, over the last five years or so, been a veritable sports renaissance at Scituate High — this, an opinion expressed to me by too many parents of S.H.S. athletes to name.

Good fortune, timing and vision all seemed to come together for this once-floundering program to make it a model for area schools. More to the point, it's been the hiring of a collection of like-minded young, energetic, somewhat idealistic coaches that has revitalized not only the Scituate High athletic programs but school and even civic pride.

Jim Willis, Steve Maguire, Matt Poirier, Kevin Greer, Mike Breen, Jeff Szymaniak, Scott Gilmartin and Bob Keefe have all come aboard as coaches in the last five years. They're all great guys who, more importantly, have their priorities in order. They know it's all about the kids. Again, this comes from the parents, as well as the student-athletes, almost unilaterally. Of course, I am also only too happy to say this has also been my observation.

I attend sporting events all over the South Shore. I can honestly say that I always look forward a little more to those games or contests featuring Scituate High teams. I'm not embarrassed to admit that the parental, community and student body support the various Sailors teams receive often serves as a personal source of inspiration.

The cross-sport support alone is off the charts. The stands at baseball games, for example, are almost without fail full of players and coaches from other spring sports. Believe me folks: this kind of thing is not going on to anywhere near this degree at most other schools.

Just look at the support the boys basketball team received this winter. By my estimates, better than 60 percent of those in attendance at UMass-Boston back in March for the Sectional championship showdown against the team from much larger Wareham High were Scituate supporters. This aggregation certainly made at least 60 percent of the noise that day.

Clearly, this kind of atmosphere which has been created must permeate the school at all levels. Who knows how many more kids might be bearing down just a little bit more academically so that they can continue to be a part of things athletically, or even how many more kids might stay in school simply to remain a part of it.

Scituate High School has a spirit right now. Any town lucky enough to have something like this going should do all it can to nurture and cultivate it. At the very least, it should not be tampered with.

In the wake of last month's failed Proposition 2-12 override vote, the entire Scituate High athletic department budget has been offered up for sacrifice. Last week, town officials shelved plans for a reduced override proposal, opting instead to turn to stabilization and contingency funds to bail the schools out. But just how much support, if any, the athletic department will receive is still very much up in the air.

Unfortunately, it is being tampered with…significantly.

In the wake of last month's failed Proposition 2-12 override vote, the entire Scituate High athletic department budget has been offered up for sacrifice. Last week, town officials shelved plans for a reduced override proposal, opting instead to turn to stabilization and contingency funds to bail the schools out. But just how much support, if any, the athletic department will receive is still very much up in the air. It is widely believed the top priority of selectmen will be providing the $825,000 needed to open the brand-new Jenkins School. Considering, $11.3 million has already been spent on the K-6 school, this is certainly understandable.

So where does this leave Scituate High athletics? So far no one in a position of insight has stepped to the plate to say, either privately or publicly. AND THIS IS THE MOST DISTURBING ASPECT OF ALL OF THIS.

What these coaches who've done such a commendable job need to hear…no, make that what they deserve to hear, is that someone is in there fighting for them. At the bare minimum, you'd expect they'd be kept somewhat in the loop. So when I hear from more than a couple of coaches, each of whom I feel all but certain would not lie to me, that I know as much as them, I'm more than a little troubled.

In fact, several coaches have expressed frustration over the lack of communication from the school department hierarchy. How bad is it? A couple of these coaches who acknowledge with pride that "something special" Scituate High currently has going are talking seriously about applying elsewhere for jobs.

"None of us want to leave, but what are we supposed to do?" posed one Scituate High coach who admitted to be "looking around." "Coaching salaries are a good part of our income. A few months from now we could be told there won't be a job for us, and by then there might not be any other opportunities out there."

In the end, it seems a pretty safe guess that there will be interscholastic competition at Scituate High next year — whether that means user fees, more and bigger fundraising efforts, and maybe even the elimination of a few things such as transportation or sub-varsity programs. Clearly, athletics are an essential part of the academic experience. You've got to believe the powers that be will sort much of this out over the coming months. I just can't help wondering how much there will be left to save by the time they figure things out and deem it worthy to share the information with the coaches.

It just seems a shame that a little more thought isn't being given at this time to the resources that have made fighting for this program such a worthy cause — the coaches.

Cohasset's jack-of-all-trades Jay Bertovich lets fly with the javelin at recent Sout hShore League meet.

Cohasset's Maitland, Kidder and Bertovich shine at state coaches' relay

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

It's only late April and the prime track and field conditions have yet to stay in the area for any length of time before the cold weather rolls back in. Cool temperatures at Saturday's State Coaches Relay meets, along with a brisk breeze, were prevalent throughout the day but that didn't stop the Silver Lake and Notre Dame girls from breaking several school records.

The Lakers' DaviAnn Brown teamed with three talented freshmen in Hannah Rapalee, Teryn Wiedermann and Jessica Coleman to break Silver Lake records in both the 4x200-meter relay (1:48.9) and sprint medley (4:14) at the Class A Relays in Andover. The Lakers clinched second-place finishes in both events and praise from head coach Joe Darche.

"I was very pleased," said Darche. "Considering our best 200 person (Jill Scanlan) was injured, it was pretty impressive."

Silver Lake also picked up a third in the javelin (274-9), fifth in the high jump (13-9) and combined for a distance of 228-5 in the discus to clinch a top-10 finish (ninth, 24-1/2 points) in the team competition.

Alisa Cotter, Katherine McGill, Rebecca Murray and Kourtney Trainor clocked a school-record 9:54.5 for a win in the 4x800 at the Class B meet at the North Attleboro High location. The record was just one of four on the day by the Aces, who set several school standards during the indoor track season.

Kristen McGill, Sue Timmons, Erin Broderick and Julie Bulman also picked up a second, and a school mark as well, with their 1:46.8 4x200 performance. Timmons, McGill, Siobhan Hart and Bulman were third in the 4x100 but their time of 51.0 seconds was a new school mark, and Hart, Trainor and Cunningham won the shot put with another record (97-1/4). Notre Dame clocked a 4:13.1 for third in the 4x400 and finished a solid fifth as a team with 38 points.

Hingham's boys had a strong day at the Class C Relays at Sharon with their sixth-place finish with 20 points. The Harbormen were second in the high jump (16-7) and fourth in the shot (123-2-1/2).

Scituate's girls finished 16th as a team, thanks to fourth place in the 4x800 (10:25.9) and fifth in the javelin event (234-5). The Lady Sailors also took sixth in the shot put with an 80-2-1/4 performance, with senior Kiely Cuddihy leading the way.

Rockland had a fifth in the 4x1600 with a 24:44.2 and took fourth in the long jump at 44-8-1/4 to finish in a tie with Hingham for 17th in the team standings.

At the Class D meet, Norwell raced to a first-place finish in the sprint medley with the foursome of Allison Zarick, Jenna Zarick, Samantha Genatassio and Kayla Halloran. The Clippers were clocked in 4:24.7. Norwell also grabbed sixth in the 4x800 with an 11:08.4 behind the 10:53.2 Sacred Heart club. In the field events, the Clippers were third in the high jump with a 14-5 and combined for a 91-3-3/4 distance in the triple jump for fifth.

Cohasset's boys were second in the javelin as Pete Maitland, Ian Kidder and Jay Bertovich combined for a distance of 453-7. The Skippers also sprinted to fourth place with a 45.6 in the 4x100 and finished with a 113-7 mark in the triple jump for fourth, led by the Jared Krupczak, Kidder and Dan Kinchla threesome. Norwell copped third in the 4x400 with a 3:36.9 and 3:49.3, sprint-medley performance.

The Cohasset boys are currently 5-0 in the South Shore League and head coach Al LaFountain knows the big meets are just around the corner for the Skippers.

"Our league is almost done," he said. "This is where they get to see some high-end athletes."

The Cohasset girls team of Gillian Weber, Nicole Whitney, Jen Buckley and Mary Silvia took second in the distance medley with a 13:40.4. clocking. The squad should prosper in the meet for the next couple of years as all of the girls are either freshmen or sophomores.

Tracksters eyeing second consecutive league crown

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High boys track team will have to wait a while longer than expected to try to clinch its second consecutive South Shore League crown.

Rain on Monday pushed the Skippers scheduled showdown with Abington (4-2) back to May 15.

Of course, the boys must still get by a road meet today (3:30 p.m.) at Mashpee, one of he teams that knocked off Abington.

The boys improved to 5-0 on the season last week with decisive wins on consecutive days over SSL foes Hull and Harwich.

On Wednesday, the Skippers proved most inhospitable hosts to Hull, blowing the Pirates out of the water, 112-24. The local lads were paced by triple winners Jared Krupczak and Ian Kidder. The two teamed for a first place run in the 4x100 relay. Individually, Krupczak won the 100 meter race and the long jump, while Kidder took top honors in the triple jump and 200.

Junior Adrain Batson also won the 400-meter race, his first victory of the season.

Krupczak, a sophomore, made it five firsts in 24 hours when he captured the top spots again in the 100 and long jump in Thursday's 97-38 win at Harwich.

This time it was captain Pete Maitland's turn to pull off the triple crown, as he won in the 400, javelin and high jump.

Girls notch first two win

The up and coming Lady Skippers, their roster dominated by freshmen and sophomores, kept pace with the boys, taking down Hull, 95-36, for their first win of the season on Wednesday, and then doubling their pleasure (and victory total) 24 hours later with an exciting 73-59 win over Harwich.

Sophomore Jen Buckley came up huge both days, winning the javelin and mile at both meets, and also running a leg for the winning 4x100 relay team versus Hull.

Fellow soph Gilian Weber also took first on both days in the 800-meter race and was twice a part of the winning 4x400 relay team.

In Thursday's tighter contest, huge first place points were collected by junior Maura O'Brien in the high jump and discus, sophomore Shelly Carter in the 100 hurdles and freshman Lindsay Kennedy in the 200.

Slide continues for baseball team

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High baseball team's losing streak reached four on Monday, as South Shore League rival Hull knocked the boys off at home, 6-1.

Hull pitcher Pat Good struck out eight Cohasset hitters on his way to a complete game win, lifting the Pirates to a 3-6 record, one game ahead of the Skippers (2-7 overall, 0-5 in league) in the league standings.

Cohasset senior Tim Straughn pitched relatively well, holding the Pirates to one run through four innings. Aided by a few errors, however, the visiting team exploded for four runs in the fifth to break the game open.

Freshman brother Tim Straughn knocked in the Skippers only run with a first inning single.

Errors were the an even greater nemesis in Thursday's 8-7 loss to Carver, with Tim Straughn again absorbing the damage on the mound. Just one of the runs in his complete game effort was earned. Tim did all he could do, whis best, recording eight strikeouts, while helpign his own cause with a mammoth home run, his first of the year.

Taylor O'Brien and freshman Rachel Garber won what was the closest match of the day, a two-set, 6-3, 6-4 victory to preserve the shutout.

With their record standing at 4-2, the Cohasset girls team has the chance to all but clinch a share of the South Shore League title this Thursday.

Cohasset and Norwell are far and away the cream of SSL. The Lady Clippers narrowly took their first match-up, 3-2, on April 8th.

Junior Lindsay Grossman will assume the top spot, hoping to improve on her 2-0 career record against Norwell phenom Sarah Bitetti. Both of their matches last year went to three sets, but a scrambled line-up this year saw Bitetti beating Englander at the top spot.

The boys have a shot of pulling to .500 this week, with winnable matches at Abington and Norton, with Norwell sandwiched between on Thursday.

Speed training Clinic

The Cohasset Recreation Department is pleased to announce the return of the Northeast Speed Training Clinic for the summer of 2002 for children ages 8-12 and 13-19

10 two0-hour clinics will be held every Monday and Wednesday evening at Milliken Field, from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., running June 24 through July 24.

The clinic focuses on balance, coordination, 20 and 40-yard dash, lateral speed, hip speed, three-step explosion, jumping, quick feet and back pedaling. There are over 150 fun, speed and quickness drills designed to improve skill performance in soccer, football, baseball, basketball and lacrosse.

The fee for this unique program is $85 per person. Registration forms may be found at the Recreation Department office, first floor, Town Hall. Space is limited, so early registration is advised.

number-one-ranked Duxbury).

"After we gave up those quick goals, we could easily have packed it in," said Coach Kevin Orcutt. "But we didn't, and I'm very proud of every player. We never quit, and in the fourth quarter we had Hingham nervous enough to force them to put back in the starting goalie they'd removed from the game a little earlier."

Hingham scored in the first 31 seconds, and then again 45 seconds later on goals by Patrick Lenhart and Drew Sowyrda, forcing Orcutt into his first timeout. But the Skippers clamped down on defense and with just over a minute to play in the period, senior Eric Libby cut the lead to one with a strong shot from the midfield.

Unfortunately, Cohasset wouldn't score again for 20 minutes. The Hingham defense – led by returning high school All-American Greg Sowyrda and longstick midfielder Craig McViney – stifled the Cohasset attack of Jason Moore, Curt Kahn, freshman Jake Previte and soph Mike Rasmussen. By the time Kahn quicksticked a shot past Hingham goalie Nate Hammond, it was a 4-1 game. Hingham pushed the lead back to 6-2, going into the fourth quarter.

Cohasset was on the wrong end of several close calls and non-calls. In one instance, Hingham played with an extra man for 30 seconds, while the referees ignored cries from the Cohasset bench, and eventually scored on the possession. In another, a Kahn goal was waved off due to goalie interference, despite the fact that the goalie seemed to have lost possession. And on two other occasions, Cohasset players were injured on questionable hits and had to leave the field, without any call being made. Both teams were whistled for seven penalties apiece.

"I won't comment on the refereeing," said coach Orcutt. "Certainly, over the course of the season, you hope that all the calls even out. But we can't say the refs cost us the game. Hingham is a good team, and their stars – Sowyrda, Lenhart and Conor Fitzgerald – proved why everyone says they're great."

The fourth quarter was Cohasset's. Jason Moore scored the only goal of the period, but the Skippers outshot, outpossessed and outhustled Hingham. The addition of senior Sean Chase on attack stabilized the group, and Moore, Kahn and Chase all had excellent scoring opportunities. Pete Whoriskey and Mike Devine, meanwhile, effectively controlled the face-offs despite being opposed by one of the state's best centermen, Sean Melanson.

"The first minute aside, we actually played our best game in a couple of weeks," said Orcutt. "This pace was faster than any we've been involved with this season, and it's great preparation for what lies ahead. Given that we were missing Paul Previte and Tom Anderson, I'd have to say this was a step forward."

Cohasset was to play Pilgrim Conference rival Marshfield on Tuesday night at Alumni, and Barnstable on Wednesday afternoon, also at home. Although Barnstable is a Pilgrim member, the Wednesday contest will not count as a league game (the league game is set for May 22). On Friday, May 3, the Skippers travel to Falmouth for a rematch with the team that beat them 11-10 on April 12. Then Cohasset hosts league rival Sandwich on Tuesday, May 7.

"Four games in eight days won't be easy," said Orcutt, "but other than Previte (out with an arm injury) we're healthy. And this is a key stretch for us."

Skippers 8, Marshfield 3

The combination of a stifling defense and opportunistic offense, on Tuesday, gave the Cohasset boys' lacrosse team their first victory in four years over Pilgrim Conference rival Marshfield.

The Skippers took the lead a minute into the contest, as senior attackman Eric Libby drove on net, and rifled a shot by Marshfield's sophomore phenom Todd Faiella. Faiella would make 17 saves on the night, and keep the game close for the visitors. But he wasn't enough.

Cohasset padded the lead to 2-0 seven minutes later, on a pretty feed from junior attackman Curt Kahn to freshman Jake Previte. An illegal stick penalty on Marshfield at the start of the second quarter sealed their doom. With a man advantage for three minutes, the Skippers threw in three unanswered scores – Libby, junior midfielder Robert Hickey and junior attackman Matt Davis doing the honors– and extended their lead to 5-1. Marshfield would never get closer than two the rest of the way.

"This was another step forward for us," said Coach Kevin Orcutt. "I didn't like our 14 penalties, and we were a little sloppy with our clearing, but holding this team to three goals is quite an accomplishment. Midfielders John Durkin and Robert Hickey, and Matt Davis, who played both attack and middie, had great games. And Weber was, as we've come to expect, outstanding."

The senior goalie chalked up 13 saves, several on the spectacular side.

Libby would finish the night with three goals. Hickey had a pair of scores, while Previte, Davis and senior middie Pete Whoriskey each had one. Kahn and Davis each assisted on two goals, while Durkin helped on one.

"We're looking for three wins this week," said Orcutt, "but this might have been the most important one, since Marshfield's season was in effect on the line. If we keep improving, we're going to be in good shape."

for the Lady Skippers, helping give Cohasset a 5-4 lead going into the halftime break.

Junior Maura McKenney threw in Cohasset's final goal of the game, despite spending most of her efforts clamping down on Sandwich's top goal scorer, holding her to one.

"[Maura] absolutely harassed her and played phenomenal defense," lauded Sweeney, who assigned McKenney to concentrate on defense, knowing it would take her somewhat out of the offensive mix.

Junior wingers Rachel Smith and Sarah Brady continued their quietly effective seasons, each pitching in assists and helping to keep the ball in Cohasset's posession for most of the second half.

Junior Gia Petrakis, who has definitely become one of the top goaltenders in the area, stopped 16 shots, thwarting Sandwich's quick attackers.

"She did a great job for us," lauded Sweeney. "She made real good decisions and played her best game of the season."

Although happy with the win, Sweeney continues to harp on the need to improve his team's transition game, and utilize the great speed he has up front and on defense. Sandwich exploited this team weakness at the end of the first half, scoring three goals in the final 2:11 of the half to turn a 5-1 score into a 5-4 count going in to the break.

Making it to the 'Hall'

plex in Oneonta, New York — home of the Detroit Tigers single-A affiliated Oneonta Tigers. Opening ceremonies will take place on the 15th, with two games apiece scheduled for teams each of the next four days. This will be followed by seedings and a single elimination tourney that ends with championship games on the 21st.

Oneonta is not far from Cooperstown, home of the Baseball Hall of Fame, and all participating teams have been invited to tour the Hall. This is an invitation Berry fully intends to accept.

"They set the schedules in a way to still give you plenty of time for a trip to the Hall of Fame," said Berry. "I know the kids are looking forward to that...and the adults too."

Coach Berry, the father of Jordan, is assisted by Bob McCunney and Paul Emanello, as well as Mike Maher.

Though this is a team comprised as much in deference to friendships as competitiveness, coach Berry does sound relatively confident his players will give a good accounting for themselves against the cream of the crop nationally. Considering the core of his team is made up of a Cohasset travelling team that has gone 34-1 over the last two years, that's hardly surprising.

"It just seems the stars were all aligned the right way 10-years ago in Cohasset," noted Berry. "This is a talented group of kids, and I'm looking forward to seeing what they can do on a big stage."

Coming from Berry, the one-time Cohasset High baseball coach and the current Scituate-Cohasset Legion coach, this assessment obviously carries some weight.

The Sunday morning practices for the team began on March 3 indoors at the South Shore Baseball Club in Hingham, a few of coach Berry's contacts paying off.

"It was kind of neat playing indoors," said Giuggio, another of the Cohasset contingent. "We had to start early There were a lot of new things we needed to learn."

Among these "new things": standard leading and stealing rules. The Cooperstown tourney is a "true baseball" (as opposed to a Little League) showcase. This change in rules also necessitates Berry teaching his pitchers to work from the stretch and avoid balks. Additionally, the bases in Cooperstown are 10 feet further apart than the standard Little League 60 feet, and the pitcher's mound, correspondingly, has been pushed back from 45 to over 50 feet.

"The kids have really adjusted well to the changes," reported Berry. "The longer throws to bases were a challenge early on, but they're coming along."

The longtime coach has been equally impressed by how quickly his grade school charges have picked up reading signals from coaches.

"I'm using the same signals I use with the legion team," reported coach B. "They're pretty complex, but these kids are getting it pretty well."

Of course, he added with a chuckle: "I don't know if that says more about these kids or the legion kids."

The Cohasset Cobras idea first started coming together, according to Berry, thanks to the financial generosity of several of the parents. Still, this is an expensive undertaking, and the team is seeking to go the fundraising route to come up with the rest of the necessary money.

A golf tourney has been scheduled at the Widow's Walk Golf Club in Scituate for Monday, May 13, to be followed by a banquet at the Red Parrot Restaurant in Hull. All proceeds from these events will go to the Cohasset Cobras.

"The folks at the Red Parrot and Widow's Walk have been great donating their facilities like this," said Berry. "I can't say enough about that. And the same for the people at the South Shore Baseball Club. They're all really doing a lot to help the kids and its appreciated."

Anyone interested in participating in the golf tourney, attending the banquet or just contributing to the Cohasset Cobras can call 781-925-0105.

Youth laxers score big at regional all-star tryouts

Curt Mills
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Each year, New England Lacrosse hosts the National Youth Lacrosse Festival to showcase the best youth players from around the country in several days of spirited team competition. Participating teams representing each state are made up of Youth All Stars who have been selected based on their performance in individual regional and state tryouts.

Towns within Massachusetts South Coast region were asked to nominate their best youth lacrosse players, at the Under 12 and Under 14 age levels, to participate in the regional tryouts, which were held last Saturday to determine the rosters for the two regional teams that would then go on to the state tryouts.

In a region that has 15 towns and plenty of lacrosse talent, Cohasset has consistently placed strong contingents of capable players on regional squads. The success this year, however, was unprecedented, as a total of seven Cohasset players were selected to move on to the state tryouts. Even more incredible, Cohasset had a clean sweep at the U12 level with all five of the original nominees (and one alternate) making it to the next round.

Congratulations to the following players for being selected to the South Coast Region All Star Team: Matt Burgess (U12), Peter Ernst (U12), Peter Oswald (U12), Mike Grimm (U12), Chris Mills (U12), Mark Flibotte (U12), and Mike Pecca (U14).

There is also a "Cinderella Story" worth telling in regard to how one of our U12 youth players made the grade. Mark Flibotte was nominated as an alternate in the Under 12 level and not thinking that he would have a chance to play, he joined his other teammates at the tryouts to cheer them on. However, as it turned out, the group only had a single goalie in the mix and Mark (a back up goalie on our town U12 team) offered to suit up and help out the cause. Mark's play was so impressive and his sportsmanship so genuine, that the attending evaluators broke from policy and nominated him on the spot to be part of the next round of tryouts. Way to go Mark!

The state tryouts will be held at Dean College in Franklin, MA this Saturday, May 4, where the final State All Star team will be selected to represent Massachusetts at the Festival, June 29–31, at U-Mass, Amherst.

Mother Nature scores victory vs. youth laxers

April showers were too much to overcome this past Sunday as all of the youth boys and girls lacrosse games were cancelled due to the weather. The next action will be this Sunday highlighted by the boy's teams, which will be taking on perennial youth powerhouse Plymouth at home at Milliken Field starting at 1 p.m..

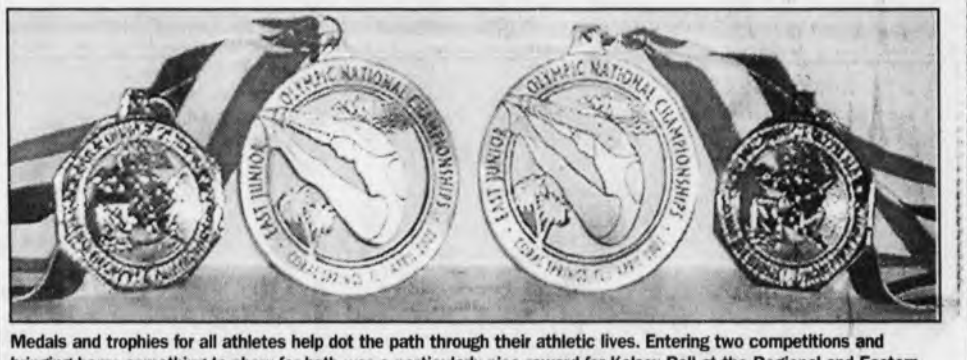
Kelsey's the Bell of the ball

Cohasset diver takes a fourth and fifth at East National championships

April was a good month for Cohasset's Kelsey Bell, as she captured the gold medal on both boards in the US Diving Jr. Olympic Regionals in Springfield, Mass. earlier this month, qualifying her for the US Diving Jr. Olympic East Nationals in Coral Springs, Fla. this past weekend.

The top 25 divers in the Eastern half of the US competed by performing eight dives in each event. Kelsey finished 4th, just 5/100ths of a point behind the third place finisher, in the 1-meter springboard competition, and placed 5th in the 3-meter contest.

Divers in the top six positions have been invited to attend the US Diving National Training Camp at the nation's newest training facility in Oklahoma in June. This will give her and the other qualified divers the chance to train with top national and international coaches.



Medals and trophies for all athletes help dot the path through their athletic lives. Entering two competitions and bringing home something to show for both was a particularly nice reward for Kelsey Bell at the Regional and Eastern National Diving competitions. There's more work, and possibly more reward ahead.

Principal, teachers make marathon effort

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Even though the pain in their legs is slowly fading, the memories will last forever. Three Cohasset educators ran in the Boston Marathon last month, and each said they won't soon forget the experience.

Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan ran in his 14th marathon and was joined by Deer Hill teachers, Nichole Santoro and Karin Taylor.

The marathon, which took place on a balmy Monday more than two weeks ago, is one of the most storied runs on the planet. This year marked the 106th year the race has taken place.

Even though both Callahan and Taylor were both suffering from shin splits, all three finished the race.

"To finish is to win."

Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan is flanked by teachers Nichole Santoro and Karin Taylor. All three completed the Boston Marathon last month.

"To finish is to win," Callahan said. "It's exciting to be out there running with all those people."

Callahan finished in five hours and five minutes, Santoro completed the race in four hours and thirty-four minutes, and Taylor finished in four hours and fifty minutes.

Taylor, a special education teacher for the fifth grade, was running in her first marathon and said crossing the finish line was very gratifying.

"The ending was really emotional," she said. "I worked so hard and it felt really good to complete what I started."

Taylor added her training had her pretty well prepared but after mile 21, the run became excruciating. She said she will probably not be running in anymore marathons.

"The training was really time consuming. I made a lot of sacrifices," she said. "But it was definitely well worth it."

Santoro, a long term substitute teacher in the fourth grade at Deer Hill, was running in her second marathon in six months after finishing the run in Providence, R.I. last year. She said the weather conditions were warmer than she expected and the heat had a dramatic impact.

"It was so hot out there that it was really easy to get dehydrated," she said. "You had to make sure you kept drinking."

Santoro, who is 23 years old and lives in Cohasset, said she hopes to run eight more marathons by the time she is 30.

"I just love to run," she said. "It can give you such a feeling of accomplishment."

Santoro also involved her students in the marathon. Running with a chip in her shoe so her progress could be documented over the Internet, she gave her students a homework assignment to watch her on their computers. At every mile marker there was a checkpoint which would relay her time onto the Web.

"It was a way to get the kids involved," she said. "Every time I finished one mile I knew I had to get to the next one for my students."

Callahan, who said it's tough to get older and see your times get longer, was still excited to be at the race. He said compared to the other marathons he has competed in, Boston definitely has the best crowd.

"No matter where you are, on the hills in Newton or in Kenmore Square, there is always a lot of people cheering for you," he said. "There spirit is contagious, it really helps."

Callahan said while there is obviously a physical toll the marathon takes on a runner, there is also a mental aspect. He said it's just as important to train emotionally as well as physically for the race.

"You have to be able to put the pain behind you," Callahan said. "It's not easy to run for that long, it takes plenty of preparation."

Callahan said he would run between 60 and 80 miles a week with a long run of 20 to 30 miles mixed in to his routine. He said he would often run to Marshfield.

"When you stay close to home it's too easy to quit," he said. "The farther away you get, there's nothing else you can do, you have to run back."

Learn how to row, signup is May 4

Anyone interested in rowing with CMI this Spring, summer, or Fall, needs to attend CMI's boat signup event on Sunday, May 5, 4p.m. at the CMI boathouse. (rowers unable to attend must notify Mary Sease, 383 8318, Jack Buckley 383 8261, or John Liffmann, 925-2796) The purpose of the sign up to create a rowing schedule such that every rower walks away from boat sign-up knowing when she/he is rowing, with whom, and why. Sweep rowers will be able to sign up with a crew that meets their interest and skill level and scullers will be able to learn about club hours and boat usage protocols.

The CMI Rowing Program provides members with opportunities to get out on the water in Alden Shells (sculling singles and doubles), Gloucester Gulls (sculling singles), Coxed Fours (sweep oars) and traditional lifesaving boats. The club goal this year is to improve upon its ability to maximize opportunities for members to take full advantage of its resources.

POLICE BRIEFS

Car wash leads to warrant arrest

Sgt. William Quigley was getting one of the Cohasset police cruisers washed at Hingham Car Wash and Sunoco station at the rotary in Hingham last Friday evening when he saw a familiar face.

Quigley called dispatch to confirm that warrants still existed for David B. Tedeschi, 44, of 130 Ash St. in Waltham, who was getting gas at the time.

Tedeschi is known to Cohasset police and had two outstanding warrants on felony charges including drug violations and fraud charges, Quigley said.

"The warrants were confirmed and he was arrested on sight," he said.

Tedeschi was brought back to Cohasset police headquarters where he was booked and held overnight. Saturday he was transferred to the Dedham House of Correction. He was arraigned Monday in Quincy District Court.

Fugitive from justice

Police computers led to the arrest of a fugitive from justice Saturday afternoon.

Officer Rick Grassie stopped Silvia Guadalupe Lozano, 28, of 172 Atlantic Ave. in Hull at about 2:45 p.m. on Forest Avenue for speeding.

But a routine check through the state and federal computer system showed Lozano to be a wanted felon on burglary charges out of Los Angeles, police said.

Lozano has apparently been wanted by the Los Angeles County Sheriff's office for 2-1/2 years.

She was taken into custody on charges of being a fugitive from justice along with operating a motor vehicle without a license and speeding.

Police said Lozano, who has four children, was released on high bail. The matter was turned over to the District Attorney's office which will handle any rendition proceedings.

A tale about Squanto and the survival of the Pilgrims

By Lou Eaton
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The third volume of the Cohasset Town History is scheduled to become available in June of this year and the Committee responsible for publication has thought to publish a few articles, courtesy of the Cohasset Mariner, about local history to stimulate interest in matters historical even though not related to the period of 1950 to 2000 covered by Volume III.

This first vignette deals with some occurrences which took place almost 400 years ago at the beginning of the 17th century.

Across the street from where I lived during my first 22 years in Cohasset there is a bronze plaque on a boulder dedicated in 1914 to Dr. Oliver E. Howe, Secretary of the Committee on Town History (published 1898) and the father of Dr. Henry Howe, author of the distinguished account of early European visitors to our shores, "Prologue to New England" (1943). The monument commemorates the visit to Cohasset by the celebrated Captain John Smith, better known for his Jamestown connections. 300 years before in 1614, during his small boat journey down the New England coast from Maine to Cape Cod and return.

When Captain Smith departed Maine and sailed back to England, he left here one of his ships in charge of Captain Thomas Hunt. Just before Hunt sailed for home, he put in to trade with Nauset Indians on Cape Cod and kidnapped 18 of them along with six Wampanoags thinking to sell them as slaves to enhance the profits of his trading voyage. And thereby hangs a tale which it might be accurate to say eventually resulted in the unlikely survival of the Plymouth colony in 1621, six years later. This is because one of the Wampanoags was an Indian named Tisquantum or Squanto as we call him. He was one of the Patuxet tribe who lived at present day Plymouth.

The records are not clear or available but I conjecture that Squanto may have been younger, smarter, more adaptable and more adventurous than the other victims who Hunt sought to sell in Malaga, Spain. Some of them were released by local friars who sought to convert them as they had been doing to other American natives for more than 100 years. There is a Web site "the History of Tisquantum" which asserts that Squanto had previously been carried off to England in 1605 as "a young person of ready capacity who much delighted in our company" by Captain George Weymouth for Sir Ferdinando Gorges. The supposition was that Squanto had been interpreting for the Indians that Hunt kidnapped and was not sold in slavery but taken to England. More reliable accounts from other sources suggest to me that the earlier Indian captive who was able to return to New England was Epenow, a Wampanoag sachem from what is now Martha's Vineyard.

In any event, Squanto somehow got to England and lived in the household of one of the financial backers of the Virginia Company trips to America for a couple of years and learned to speak English. He eventually got a ship from Bristol which took him to Newfoundland where he met a Captain Thomas Dermer, who knew about him and who brought him back to England and brought him to Sir Ferdinando Gorges. Gorges arranged to send him on a ship with Captain Dermer explore natural resources and set up a trading post in New England and at the end of the trip, Squanto would be returned to his home in Patuxet.

Samoset walked into the very small Plymouth colony and amazed them by speaking English.

However, when they got to Patuxet in 1619, they discovered that his whole tribe had been wiped out by "the Indian Plague" in 1617. (probably smallpox spread by earlier European fishermen visitors). Squanto stayed and moved in with a neighboring tribe, the Pokanoket, which was the home of the Grand Sachem of the Wampanoag Tribe, Massasoit. Shortly thereafter, Captain Dermer and his crew were attacked and captured by the Nauset Indians on Cape Cod, but allegedly Squanto came and was able to negotiate their release. Poor Captain Dermer was later wounded in an attack by Indians near Martha's Vineyard and subsequently died of his wounds after reaching Virginia.

Meanwhile the Pilgrims, who were completely ignorant of all this previous history and apparently did not have John Smith's published map of the New England Coast showing Plymouth Harbor as visited in his 1614 trip. After what they interpreted as a hostile reception from the Nauset tribe on Cape Cod and after stealing a small amount of seed corn they discovered, the Pilgrims decided in December 1620 to make their permanent settlement at Plymouth. Significantly, this was not to be a trading post but they were expecting and intending to establish their homes, here in the wilderness, not knowing that because of the plague, this region was the only place along the coast empty of Indians.

Early in 1621 an Abenaki Tribe sachem from Maine named Samoset walked into the very small Plymouth colony and amazed them by speaking English. He had learned a small vocabulary at Pemaquid and Monhegan Island during the 12 years that Sir Francis Popham had a trading post following the collapse of the Sagadohoc Colony. Samoset assisted the Pilgrims in trading with the Wampanoags and sent the Grand Sachem. Massasoit word that the Pilgrims would, like to make a treaty with them. Massasoit sent Squanto to be interpreter and negotiate a treaty. The rest is history that many of us are familiar with.

Squanto came to live with the Pilgrims at his old tribal home, we think with Stephen Hopkins who had known many Indians when he lived in Jamestown, Virginia. The Pilgrims and Massasoit did negotiate a treaty which lasted during the life of Massasoit who died in 1661. It provided primarily that they would not harm each other and that if either were attacked, the other would come to their aid. This latter provision led to a bloody expedition to nearby Weymouth in 1622 against Massasoit "enemies" who were rebellious against his authority and has resulted in adverse comments by current day Wampanoags against Captain Standish. Another understanding in the treaty was that the Pilgrims would pay for any Indian land they occupied. I think it is fair to say that Squanto's negotiation of the treaty was about the only fair and reasonable treatment of Indians by any of the English traders or, later, settlers with the possible exception of Roger Williams in Providence Plantations and it was essential to the survival of the colony.

This plaque at Cohasset Harbor commemorates the discovery of Cohasset by Capt. John Smith.

Helped the English

Even more essential was the fact that Squanto returned to live among the English at his old home. He helped them use the old fields to sow their corn in the spring of 1621 using the seed stolen and later traded for from the Nauset tribe and fertilized under his instructions. He showed them the best fishing grounds, how to catch the alewives and eels and he was their interpreter in dealing with other Indian tribes.

However, in late 1621 or early 1622, he seems to have been using his position with the Pilgrims to cut deals in his own behalf with Indian tribes with whom they were trading, threatening to "release the plague" against them, if they did not do as he wished. Massasoit demanded that the Pilgrims turn him over to be executed. But Governor Bradford temporized because Squanto was so valuable to the settlers and perhaps his conduct could be corrected. The problem became moot when during a trading expedition to the Massachusetts Indians in late 1621, Squanto got sick with "the Indian Fever" and died. Governor Bradford wrote in part that he "bequeathed sundry of his things to sundry of his English friends as remembrances of his love, of whom they had great loss."'

It does appear that without Squanto, the colony would not have survived. He was essential to communicate, to negotiate a peace with the Indians and to assure the food supply by teaching the town bred settlers how to grow food and where to fish and hunt.

'MOMologues' puts spotlight on motherhood's comic side

By Amy Lambiaso
ALAMBIAS@CNC.COM

Motherhood is a laughing matter. That's what a group of local moms, two of them from Scituate, have exposed in their hilarious original comedy "The MOMologues."

On stage just in time for Mother's Day, the MOMologues highlights the hilarious truths behind the toughest job you'll ever love — motherhood.

Written, directed and preformed by mothers, the MOMolgues gives a first-hand look at the comical side of maternal duties like changing dirty diapers and nursing in public places.

The production begins its nine-show run Friday, May 3 at the Institute of Contemporary Art Theater in Boston, and Scituate mom Lisa Rafferty — who co-wrote the script — said she laughs more each time she sees it.

"I couldn't believe how funny these mothers are," said Rafferty who also directs the play. "And they have so many stories to tell."

Rafferty began writing The MOMologues in the summer of 2000, but set out with a different plan. She had enough material of her own from raising her three young children, but wanted more. And with just a little digging, she got a little help from her friends.

Sheila Eppolito, a full-time Chelmsford mom with three young daughters has done professional writing before, but never for theater. But she proved to be a perfect candidate for one of Lisa's partners-in-writing on the MOMologues.

"I knew Lisa had a great idea with this play," Eppolito said. "And the material we had was so funny, we couldn't wait to put it together."

Stefanie Cloutier joined the two women not only co-write the play, but to perform in the show as well. She and Rafferty had worked together before, and Cloutier said she knew this play was special.

It was original, and it was about something so close to the three women. It was real-life material.

"Being a parent is like a parallel universe," Cloutier said. "It's a different place, one that only mothers can tell you about."

And that's what these three women set out to do.

The MOMologues was first performed in October 2000 for a small audience at the Footlight Club in Jamaica Plain. As America's oldest community theater, the Footlight runs an alternative series for original shows each year. That year, The MOMologues stole the set.

"I'll never forget that first night," Rafferty said. "The audience started laughing at the forth line and never stopped."

It was then Rafferty realized the one-act play had to be expanded into a full-length show.

Today it is not only the hilarious first act which follows women through four stages — trying to get pregnant, being pregnant, labor and delivery and the newborn experience — but a second act bringing women full-circle.

Adjusting to motherhood, the tooth fairy, peeing in playgrounds, discipline issues and the realization of gender differences is the focus of the second act. And after all this, the actresses end with trying to get pregnant again.

MOMologue cast members rehearse a scene from the upcoming production which opens May 3 at the Institute of Contemporary Art Theatre in Boston.

"It's such a real look at what mothers go through," Cloutier said. "And it's what all mothers are dying to talk about — the funny things their kids do."

Rafferty said the material is witty, and the actresses are eminently entertaining.

Ellen Stone, a former stand-up comedian from Quincy is the group's designated "mother-in-training," Cloutier said. Maria Wardwell, a mother of two in Wellsley has a lengthy background in community theater and works as a performance improvement consultant; Charlotte Dietz, a Newton mother of three who works in marketing; and Cloutier round-out the cast in the nearly sold-out shows.

"It's such a real look at what mothers go through. And it's what all mothers are dying to talk about — the funny things their kids do."

Stefanie Cloutier, co-writer and cast member of the MOMologues

Rafferty said the women are from all walks of life, which makes their chemistry on stage so great. She directed the same four "moms" when the first act ran in 2000 and said their lively and unpredictable personalities make the show.

"This is really my life," said Rafferty, who also serves as Co-Chairman for United for Scituate Schools, a grassroots group supporting school funding for Scituate. "And I have loved every minute of this production."

Fellow Scituate resident Kim Dickinson is the show's costume designer, and another source of material for the show. Dickinson has a 6-year-old daughter and has worked as a professional designer for children's videos and for Boston's Huntington Theater Company costume shop. Joining the group was an honor, said

SOUTHERN ROCKERS HITTING THEIR STRIDE

Marshall Tucker Band comes to Company Theatre May 4

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The Marshall Tucker Band (MTB) was one of the major acts of the 1970s Southern rock movement. But unlike such Dixie-bred peers as the Allman Brothers Band and Lynyrd Skynyrd, who mixed electric blues and British rock influences with their own Southern roots, MTB carved out its niche by fusing its rock with the more traditional southbound genres such as straight country, western swing and gospel.

Marshall Tucker faded from the mainstream airwaves as Southern rock's heyday waned at the end of the 70s. The band was also slowed down by the 1980 death of original bassist Tommy Caldwell in a car accident, as well as by original guitarist/songwriter and brother Toy Caldwell's departure for a solo career in the mid 80s, until he too died in 1993. But as MTB lead singer and lone remaining original member Doug Gray assures, the Tucker Band has never really gone away, playing at least 150 shows nationally a year and selling albums consistently to a loyal, core following while always managing to find new ways to keep its sound contemporary and progressive.

MTB brings its sound to the local area Saturday, May 4, appearing in concert at Norwell's Company Theatre.

"We've made a point of staying out on the road and working consistently through the years," said Gray. "The only difference is that now we have a lot more control over the whole enterprise. We're able to pick and choose our dates and play our shows the way we want to, without the more rigorous demands coming from other ends of the business."

"Since 1980, and especially the mid 80s, we've actually done better as a band in terms of overall record sales and label deals working within the more independent country-rock markets. Over the years, we've simply let our records come out, and we've found that we've always had enough of a following that has stayed with us that each record has sold in strong numbers. Maybe not like back in the days of the national chart hits, but certainly enough to keep us going as a band and moving forward."

The Marshall Tucker Band brings the southern/country rock sound that made them famous in the '70s to the South Shore Saturday in a concert performance at Norwell's Company Theatre.

Hailing from Spartanburg, South Carolina, MTB first hit the national spotlight in 1973 through its association with the Allman Brothers, signing to the Allmans' Capricorn Records label and opening for their mentors on that year's national tour. While MTB could hold its own in the Allmans-style Southern blues/boogie jamming department, it soon became apparent that the Tucker Band's sound was coming from a more traditional country-based direction, putting more of the country in country-rock. Such 70s fiddle- and pedal steel-powered radio hits as "Fire on the Mountain," "Searchin' for a Rainbow" and "This Ol' Cowboy" more typified MTB's overall sound.

While the Tucker Band's songwriting started out rather simple and straightforward (early singles such as "Can't You See" and "Take the Highway" seem dated these days), there was a leaning towards innovation from the beginning as well. Courtesy of original reedsman Jerry Eubanks, MTB became the only other major 70s rock act besides Jethro Tull to feature flute prominently in its sound. The songwriting also took on a worldly, cynical edge with the band's last major hit, 1977's "Heard It In a Love Song" ("...can't be wrong").

"Our stage shows and tours are far more focused and together these days than they were back in the 70s, even though that was when we were having the biggest hits and the most national success. It seems that when there's less at stake for you as a band, you can play more for your audience and be yourselves.

Marshall Tucker band lead singer Doug Gray

The cast of the Quincy Dinner Theatre production of "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," ham it up.

'Funny Thing' happening at Quincy Dinner Theatre

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

George S. Stevens, head of the Braintree-based Darling Productions, goes back a long way with the musical "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum." In addition to starring in several productions of "Forum" from "Cape Cod to Boston" over the years, Stevens directed and produced the show during the 1988 inaugural season of his Quincy Dinner Theatre. He may have had a range of associations with it over the years, but Stevens' opinion of "Forum" has remained consistent.

"I love the show," Stevens explained last week by telephone from his office. "It is just about the funniest musical comedy of all time."

With a book by Burt Shevelove and Larry Gelbart ("M*A*S*H") that is an homage to the farcical plays of Maccius Plautus (254 BC-184 BC), and music and lyrics by Stephen Sondheim, "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum" premiered on Broadway 40 years ago this month. Originally meant to be a vehicle for Phil Silvers, then Milton Berle, "Forum" debuted with Zero Mostel starring as Pseudolus, a slave who must endure a series of wild adventures in order to gain his freedom. The show features now classic Sondheim tunes including "Comedy Tonight." Six years ago, an acclaimed, Tony Award-winning revival of "Forum" opened in New York with Nathan Lane as Pseudolus, succeeded by Whoopi Goldberg.

Stevens is currently presenting "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," in a production directed by Christine Porter of Randolph, at the Quincy Dinner Theatre. A cast of 18 is backed by an eight-piece orchestra, led by Musical Director Jason Brennan of Randolph.

"The show is big and bawdy" according to Stevens. "We're having a blast with it and so is the audience. The thing about 'Forum' is that because it takes its inspiration from the burlesque shows of the 1930s it is a very funny and wild at the same time. It's one of the great Broadway musical comedies."

(Darling Productions will present "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum" through May 19 at the Quincy Dinner Theatre, 1170 Hancock Street, Quincy Center. For tickets and information, call 781/843-5862 or visit www.quincydinnertheater.com. On Sunday, May 12, Darling Productions will present a special Mother's Day matinee of "Forum" which will include corsages and champagnes for the mothers in the audience.)

Coconut macaroons

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

A thousand years ago, macaroons were nothing more than baked almond paste but by the Victorian age, they had became elegant cone-shaped coconut cookies. Today, a coconut macaroon is often a lackluster mound of beaten egg whites and coconut or, at their worst, nothing more than a baked mixture of condensed milk and sweetened coconut. The question was how to get great coconut flavor with a chewy, not-too-heavy texture.

My initial testing included five recipes, ranging from dense, wet cookies to light, if not dry, mounds of coconut. The test winners were simple enough – unbeaten egg whites mixed with sugar, unsweetened coconut, salt, and vanilla. The testing clearly showed that the type of coconut, sweetened versus unsweetened, had a major effect on texture but cookies made with just one type were either too sticky or too dry so I tested a combination of sweetened and unsweetened. This worked well, giving the cookie a more luxurious texture without being wet or heavy. I also found, to my surprise, that sweetened coconut has more flavor than dried, so the coconut flavor was turned up a notch. Another key issue was the ratio of coconut to unbeaten egg whites. Testing showed that a recipe using 3 1/2 cups of coconut to only 1 egg white was dense and heavy; 3 cups of coconut to three egg whites seemed a better ratio. To add still a bit more moisture to the cookies, I tried using corn syrup instead of sugar as a sweetener and found that the cookies were slightly moister, held together a bit better, and were pleasantly chewy. Melted butter was tried but discarded since it masked the flavor of the coconut as did sweetened condensed milk. Flour – I tried both cake and all-purpose – was helpful in eliminating the stickiness of cookies made entirely with sweetened coconut, but the combination of sweetened and unsweetened solved this problem without resorting to other ingredients.

I still felt that the cookies were a bit light in coconut flavor, so I tried adding cream of coconut and hit the jackpot. The coconut flavor was superior to any other cookie made to date. (Since cream of coconut is sweetened, I did have to decrease the amount of corn syrup.)

Putting it all together is easy, another benefit of not beating the egg whites, a technique used by many of my original test recipes. The liquid ingredients are whisked together, the dry ingredients are mixed, and then the two are combined. I found it best to refrigerate this dough for 15 minutes to make it easier to work with but, in a pinch, you can skip this step. (Cold dough makes thicker cookies.) In an effort to produce a nicely browned, crisp exterior, I experimented with oven temperatures and finally settled on 375 degrees; 400 tended to overcook the bottoms and lower temperatures never produced the sort of browning I was hoping for.

I am partial to huge, two-fisted cookies so I call for 1/4 cup of batter for each cookie. This also produces a nice contrast between a crispy exterior and a moist interior. However, if you prefer a daintier confection, use just two tablespoons. I also found that these cookies are great when the bottom third is dipped in chocolate. Since the cookie is not overly sweet, the chocolate is a nice compliment, not a case of coals to Newcastle.

TRIPLE COCONUT MACAROONS

Cream of coconut, available canned, is sweetened coconut juice commonly used in piña colada cocktails. Note that this is an entirely different product from coconut cream or coconut milk, both of which are unsweetened. Be sure to mix the can's contents thoroughly before using since the mixture separates upon standing. Look for unsweetened desiccated coconut in natural food stores or in Asian markets. Do not forget to grease the parchment paper for baking – the cookies are much easier to remove.

1 cup cream of coconut (see note above)
2 tablespoons light corn syrup
4 large egg whites
2 teaspoons vanilla extract
1/2 teaspoon salt
3 cups unsweetened dessicated coconut (about 8 1/2 ounces)
3 cups sweetened flaked coconut (about 8 1/2 ounces)

1. Adjust oven racks to highest and upper-middle positions and heat oven to 375 degrees. Line 2 cookie sheets with parchment paper and lightly spray parchment with non-stick vegetable cooking spray. (If you don't have any spray, it's okay. The cookies will simply be a bit harder to remove from the paper.)

2. In small bowl, whisk together cream of coconut, corn syrup, egg whites, vanilla and salt to combine.

3. In large bowl, combine unsweetened and sweetened coconuts; toss together with hands, breaking up any clumps between fingertips. Pour liquid ingredients into dried coconut and mix with rubber spatula until evenly moistened. (If desired, press plastic wrap directly on surface of dough and refrigerate 30 minutes; mixture will be slightly firmer and easier to work with.)

4. Scoop 9 cookies onto the first cookie sheet with 1 3/4-inch-diameter ice cream scoop, mounded with 1/4 cup dough. (Alternatively, roll 1/4 cup dough between palms of hands into 1 3/4-inch balls.) Form cookies into loose haystacks with fingertips or gently flatten with palm of hand into 2 1/4-inch rounds, moistening hands with water as necessary to prevent sticking. Bake until light golden brown, about 20 minutes, turning cookie sheet from front to back halfway through baking. Repeat with second sheet.

5. Cool cookies on cookie sheets 2 minutes; remove to wire rack with metal spatula. Makes 18 cookies

CHOCOLATE-DIPPED VARIATION

Follow recipe for Triple Coconut Macaroons. Cool baked macaroons to room temperature, about 30 minutes. Line cookie sheet with parchment paper. Melt 8 ounces chopped semisweet chocolate in small heatproof bowl set over pan of almost-simmering water, stirring once or twice, until smooth; remove from heat. (To melt chocolate in microwave, heat at 50% power for 2 minutes; stir and continue heating at 50% 1 minute longer. If chocolate is not yet entirely melted, heat an additional 30 seconds at 50% power.) Dip bottom 3/4-inch of cookies in chocolate and place on parchment-lined cookie sheet. Refrigerate until chocolate sets, about 30 minutes.

Springtime splendor in the shady border

Green thumbs up

Part 2
By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Late April showers have provided welcome, beneficial moisture for our early May flowers. Colorful carpets of creeping phlox (Phlox subulata) and candytuft (Iberis) cascade over rock walls, walks and landscape timbers creating glowing patches of pink, white and lavender. Pretty pansies in every color of the rainbow provide splashes of color in containers, window boxes and along garden paths, their smiling faces irresistible to young and old alike. Elegant tulips hold their heads high on strong, sturdy stems, reaching for the warmth of the sun. With the coming of May, our spring landscapes come to life as tender green leaves clothe trees and shrubs and spring blooms paint the landscape with cheerful abandon.

In local woodlands and our shady gardens, trees, shrubs and wildflowers are parading their finery for all to enjoy. The month of May tends to be peak bloom season in our wooded areas as many woodland flora bloom in spring, before the trees have fully leafed out, to take advantage of the sun's light and warmth. Lady slippers, trillium, trollius, May Apples, Virginia bluebells, lungworts, Solomon's seal, primroses, and jack-in-the-pulpit will all be in their glory this month.

Many of these woodland delights can be grown successfully in our backyard gardens if given the proper growing conditions including moisture-retentive, well-drained soils and dappled sunlight. A fluffy woodsy soil, mildly acidic, rich and light with a high humus content will suit many of these attractive plants. Ideal shade garden soil should be two parts humus (compost, peat or leaf mold), one part sand, and one part loam.

The heavenly blue flowers of forget-me-nots (Myosotis) are perfect foils for many of these lovely spring blooms. Mounds of tiny blue, white and sometimes pink flowers appear in May. Over the years, these charming biennials have naturalized throughout the garden, occasionally to the point of being a nuisance, but I cannot imagine the shady borders without them and tolerate their exuberance until they finish blooming. When they begin to decline and become unsightly, I selectively weed out the majority, leaving just enough to re-seed themselves while occasionally picking the seed heads and sprinkling them in new locales.

The perennial forget-me-not, Brunnera macrophylla, commonly known by the names alkanet, anchusa or Siberian bugloss, is a handsome, albeit more restrained source of this appealing sky blue color. Long-lasting, delicate sprays of intense blue blossoms appear in April and linger into May as elegant, heart-shaped leaves emerge and enlarge through the season. Several new cultivars have been introduced into the trade in recent years including B. 'Langtrees', a variety with large silvery blotches on its leaves and variegated forms that glow in the shady border with stunning, large, boldly marked foliage. A fabulous new cultivar, B. 'Jack Frost', exhibits spectacular silver-tinted leaves. These attractive perennials are lovely complements to hosta, ferns, astilbes, and bleeding hearts. Consistent moisture throughout the summer is a must or the leaves may become crispy and the plant may succumb during prolonged periods of drought.

For drier locales, consider the family of barrenworts (Epimedium spp.) These wonderful semi-evergreen perennials should be more widely grown as they produce delightful airy sprays of spurred blooms for 4 to 6 weeks that dance upon wiry, arched stems amid broad carpets of handsome foliage. Each year more varieties become available as more gardeners discover these low maintenance, rhizomatous plants that gradually spread to form an attractive carpet beneath deciduous trees. Although epimediums are tolerant of considerable shade, dappled light and moisture-retentive soils are preferred. Once established, these perennials can withstand periods of drought and will even survive beneath greedy maples. A wide range of flower colors is available including red, pink, white, yellow, orange and purple. Their attractive leaves emerge with tinted margins in springtime and turn bronze in autumn with many types having foliage that persists well into the winter months.

Foamflowers (Tiarella spp.) are charming native plants that have joined the ever-growing parade of hybridization and selection to provide numerous cultivars with varied flowers and foliage. The native species, T. cordifolia, bears fluffy spikes of star-shaped flowers in creamy white above clumps of hairy, fleshy, heart-shaped leaves. Newer introductions demonstrate an interesting diversity of leaf forms, many highly divided with dark blotches or veining on the leaves. Tolerant of considerable shade, a moist soil that is especially well drained during the winter months is desirable for these rhizomatous perennials. Most are semi-evergreen with bronze-tinted foliage during the fall. Tiarella 'Iron Butterfly' is particularly attractive and long blooming with dozens of pale pink flowers currently in bloom above multi-lobed, pointed leaves that are heavily streaked with deep purple to near black splotches.

Bleeding hearts (Dicentra spp.) add touches of pink and white flowers to the shady border in addition to providing attractive, finely cut blue-green foliage that furnishes a pleasant contrast to the broad leaves of hostas. Tolerant of sun where soils are moisture-retentive, they thrive in dappled shade. The lovely, old-fashioned bleeding heart, D. spectabilis, with its perfectly formed rose-pink or white, heart-shaped flowers carried on arching, 3-foot fleshy stems, is truly a delight although the plant turns yellow and enters dormancy in mid-summer. Fringed bleeding hearts, D. eximia, add marvelous textural contrast to the shady garden and bloom intermittently throughout the summer.

Visit our local nurseries and add a few of these springtime treasures to your shady border for a stunning spring display year after year.

Dickinson, because the show combines professionalism and motherhood so well.

The MOMologues will be performed Fridays and Saturdays through May 18, with a special Mother's Day matinee on Sunday, May 12 to benefit Jane Doe Inc., the Massachusetts coalition against sexual abuse and domestic violence.

"I'll never forget that first night. The audience started laughing at the forth line and never stopped."

MOMologues director and co-writer Lisa Rafferty

Opening night this Friday will benefit Mothers and More, a South Shore support group for "sequencing mothers" — women transitioning from full-time professionals to stay-at-home moms.

Two performances will benefit two of Scituate's Elementary Parent Teacher Organizations — Friday, May 10 is Hatherly Elementary PTO night, and Friday, May 17 is Cushing Elementary PTO night. Rafferty said busloads of Scituate moms are heading to Boston those nights to help support the groups and share some laughs.

Cloutier said the cast is considering adding another show to the run due to the fantastic response it has received even before opening night. Six of the nine shows have sold out, and the remaining three are nearing capacity.

"We have such a good time with every rehearsal and every time we get together," Eppolito said. "This whole journey has been really amazing. This play will go someplace."

Tickets for The MOMologues are $22 and can be purchased online at www.momologues.com, or by calling (978) 369-5776.

SOUTHERN ROCKERS HITTING THEIR STRIDE

"Our fans have never really cared if we were rock, country, gospel, jazz-rock fusion or any number of other styles in between," Gray said. "Even though we've been by category a Southern rock band, we've always aimed to feature all of these elements in our sound and move off in new directions. I think that's the main thing that's held our fans interest for so long."

The original MTB lineup long gone, the current band is carried on very capably by players who've joined up at various points over the last two decades. They include guitarists Rusty Milner and Chris Hicks, slide guitarist Stuart Swanlund, bassist Tony Heatherly, drummer B.B. Borden, and the latest addition, joining in 1999, Gray's own 23-year-old nephew, keyboardist, saxophonist and flutist Clay Cook.

Said Gray, "Our stage shows and tours are far more focused and together these days than they were back in the 70s, even though that was when we were having the biggest hits and the most national success. It seems that when there's less at stake for you as a band, you can play more for your audience and be yourselves. And what we are in essence is a traditional band and also a band that jams, and we can become creative onstage. We always pick our songs right before going onstage, instead of using a strict set list, and we like to work the crowds during the show."

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MAY 1, 2002

Plan to get primary ventures off the ground during the first week of May. After that a Mercury retrograde period begins to take effect, placing all important signings, decisions, new starts off limits. In addition, a lunar eclipse/full moon culminates May 26. Gear up for an intense, hectic month. Planetary action today offers particularly favorable influences between 9:00 a.m.-1:16 p.m., when the Capricorn moon becomes inactive. Zero in on career, business issues and initiate action in this time period. The remainder of the afternoon and evening are prime for finishing projects already begun and tying up loose ends.

THURSDAY, MAY 2

An inactive Capricorn moon prompts you to take on a full work agenda. However, do not initiate new projects until tomorrow. Instead, follow up and finish old business. Tackle jobs you have been putting off and get them out of the way. Zero in on commitments you have taken on, promises you have made to others and fulfill them.

FRIDAY, MAY 3

Conflicting planetary influences can make for a difficult day. The moon enters freedom-oriented Aquarius at 12:43 a.m. However, an applying alignment of Mars and Saturn urges you to use extra caution, pay attention, avoid taking risks. The best way to channel this combination is to stay busy with practical projects, particularly jobs that require hard physical labor. Get back on track with fitness and exercise routines. A lunar alignment to Neptune may help you to mellow out this evening.

SATURDAY, MAY 4

Mars and Saturn conjoin at 1:57 a.m., 14-degrees of Gemini. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 3:16 a.m. This moon will decrease in light until May 12, when the Taurus new moon occurs. A harmonious lunar contact to Pluto offers a last chance opportunity to launch new endeavors. Plan to get new projects off the ground before 10:05 a.m., when this alignment occurs. The remainder of the day rates high for relaxing, pursuing favorite pastimes. Venus and Neptune interact, highlighting creative or romantic activities.

SUNDAY, MAY 5

The Aquarius moon aligns with its planetary ruler, Uranus, at 8:46 a.m. and becomes inactive. Expect the unexpected and go with the flow. At 11:46 a.m. the moon enters laidback Pisces. Put career or domestic worries on the back burner. This is a day to relax and enjoy the good things in life.

MONDAY, MAY 6

It may be difficult to get back to work and to focus on practical matters today. Others are likely to be sleepy, forgetful, careless. The moon continues to travel in Pisces, forming stressful contacts to planets in the afternoon and evening. Don't get caught up in worries, anger, self-doubts. Stay busy with creative projects. Meditate, play music. At 10:10 p.m. the Pisces moon aligns with Pluto and becomes inactive.

TUESDAY, MAY 7

Venus and Saturn conjoin at 14-degrees of Gemini at 8:10 a.m., making for a rough start to this day. You may have to face the facts about relationships that have become too one-sided for comfort and make hard decisions. Seek the advice of an elder or expert. The Pisces moon is inactive, traveling at the tail end of the zodiac. That means that new starts are off limits. Plan to finish old business, handle routine chores and errands, clean and reorganize. Get extra rest tonight.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 8

Planetary action turns around dramatically at 12:22 a.m., when the moon enters fiery Aries. Gear up for a fast-paced day. Mars, the planetary ruler of Aries, opposes Pluto at 6:09 p.m. Stay alert and be extra cautious when driving or operating machinery. People may be irritable, aggressive, agitated. Channel high energy constructively. Tackle jobs that require physical labor and exertion or let off steam by spending extra time with exercise workouts.

Courting the new runway

Two trial dates in Massport dispute

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

People want to be able to move from one place to another with limited hassle and few delays.

But transportation — whether by car, train or air – comes with an environmental price, one which some say is too great to justify a proposed project in certain cases.

The long-awaited resurfacing of Route 228 in Hingham from the Hull line to Queen Ann's Corner, which is now underway, will no doubt make motorists wish they had the option of helicopter travel in the months ahead. But no one denies the need for restoring the infrastructure of the heavily traveled state highway.

As far as trains go, restoration of the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad project appears to be practically a certainty. Although some are still fighting the project, the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority sat down with affected towns and reached

Pratt wants train, cemetery at peace

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Now that Woodside Cemetery has been expanded and the Gold Star Mothers memorial installed – Glenn Pratt wants to make sure nothing disturbs the peaceful setting.

But with the Greenbush train slated to head down the tracks in two years, Pratt, chairman of the cemetery committee, is taking no chances. To that end, he wrote a letter to the project manager for the engineering firm of Cashman-Balfour-Beatty, which will construct the train line.

"I don't want to see the peaceful, serene setting of the cemetery be diminished."
— Glenn Pratt

"As you know part of the rail restoration project abuts the cemetery," Pratt stated in his April 24 letter. "As is the case on most of the abutting properties along the rail bed, 40 years of growth has created wonderful vegetated barrier, such is

Small crowd, but big ideas

Group brainstorms on vision for town

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Jim Shipsky set the tone for Saturday's Master Plan workshop.

"I'm in love with Cohasset," said the Doane Street resident.

That was something the dozen or so town officials and interested residents in attendance could all agree on:

Cohasset is a beautiful place to live.

But the vision for what this small seaside town should be in 20 years and how to get there varied greatly, although there were common elements.

Consultants with Community Design Partnership, hired to help the town work through the Master Plan process, facilitated the brainstorming discussion at Town Hall. Over the next few weeks, they will try to focus the feedback they collected so it can be used in plotting a plan of action.

That direction the plans can take could include a range of potential options from zoning bylaw changes to establishing overlay districts, not unlike local historic districts, to protect the character of a neighborhood.

Attendance was light no doubt due to the sunny, warm spring afternoon, but the small number actually facilitated the openness of the discussion. Everyone got involved and seemed to feel comfortable expressing their views ranging from the need for sidewalks to concerns about global warming.

Larissa Brown presented an overview of the Master Plan process including the positives Cohasset has to offer, such as location and its good fiscal health, and the challenges the town faces including shifting demographics, unprotected open space, preserving historic heritage and cultural resources, and increasing taxes.

Girl cuts her hair for a cause

Brooke Cummings shows off her swinging haircut. The first-grader donated her locks to charity.

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Most seven-year-olds are worrying about which cartoon is going to be aired before school. However, there is a first-grader in Cohasset who is socially conscious beyond her years.

Brooke Cummings, 46 Church St., recently got her hair cut, but this wasn't your everyday chopping of locks. Brooke cut her hair for Locks of Love, a charity that provides hairpieces to financially disadvantaged children under the age of 18 with medical hair loss.

Brooke grew her hair for one year, starting when she was six, in order to have it be long enough to qualify for the program.

"It was sad to think about kids with no hair," she said. "I thought this was a way I could help."

Brooke had 14 inches of hair taken off during April vacation and she says she doesn't miss the extra weight.

"I like my new look," she said. "Plus, now a child doesn't have to walk around with no hair."

A genuine wig for a child, made from human hair, can often cost upwards of $5,000, so Brooke's donation will be very appreciated.

Lori Cummings, Brooke's mother, said she heard about the organization while having a conversation with a friend. When Brooke saw a television commercial that featured bald children wearing bandanas, she mentioned it to her mother and thought it was a way she could help.

"This was all her initiative, it was a wonderful thing for her to do."
— Lori Cummings, mother

"It's really unbelievable that a seven-year-old is so concerned about this," she said. "Some adults could learn a lot from her."

Brooke, whose hair is now shoulder length, said she's going to grow her hair long again so she can cut it at this

Republican to challenge Bradley

District to have race for state rep.

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It's beginning to look like former state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, a Cohasset Republican, enjoyed the kind of career usually reserved for Democrats. She went years without a challenge to her incumbency.

But a little more than midway through his first term, state Rep. Garrett Bradley will have no such luxury. The Hingham Dmocrat will face off with a Cohasset businessman for the rights to serve the Third Plymouth District, consisting of Hingham, Hull, Cohasset and one precinct in Scituate, in the state election in November.

"It's clear we don't have people in the Legislature with a keen sense of what it is to run a business."
— Nathaniel Palmer, republican candidate

Nathaniel Palmer of Little Harbor Road, who is co-owner of Delphi Group, a consulting firm that focuses on growth strategies for high-tech companies, is disgusted enough with the Beacon Hill budget process to want to get involved.

Palmer, 32, who is a member of the Cohasset Republican Town Committee, moved to Cohasset about three years ago from Milton where he served two terms on the Housing Authority, an elected board.

"After watching the last debate, it's clear we don't have people in the Legislature with a keen sense of what it is to run a business," says Palmer, adding the state budget has grown faster than the Big Dig. "They (legislators) don't know what it is to make tough decisions to keep a budget in line."

Palmer says he'll be touting the message throughout his campaign that state spending has to be brought under control. He bemoans the fact the Legislature is raising taxes while cutting local aid.

"It's a vicious cycle of more money going to the state and less money going to the people, who need it," he says.

Increasing the commercial tax base on the South Shore is also at the top of Palmer's priority list. He says his "real-world" business experience over the past 10 years helping high-tech companies grow is something he could

Record numbers of wild turkeys come home to roost

Native bird is here to stay

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The comeback of the wild turkey in Massachusetts is a wildlife restoration success story.

So much so, that here on the South Shore toms, hens and their young are becoming increasingly familiar.

More residents are reporting sightings in their backyards and side streets. Turkey reports are even turning up in police logs, and sometimes involve unfortunate incidents, such as one last December in Hingham.

Al Currie, the animal control officer in Hingham, made the difficult decision to shoot a turkey that caused traffic tie-ups and a car accident near Muzzi's Corner, one of the more treacherous intersections in town. The shooting outraged those who were trying to coax the turkey to safety. It was a no-win situation, Currie said.

"We'd had 80 calls about that turkey over the course of a week," recalled Currie, who explained killing the animal was a last resort. "It wouldn't stay in the woods, kept going into the street and could have killed somebody."

"It's a native bird and has taken its rightful place here — one that was lost due to our errors of the past."
— Bill Davis, MassWildlife

The big birds that can weigh up to 24 pounds love birdseed (from backyard feeders), berries, nuts, crab apples and insects, among other foods, which are plentiful.

Also, the mild winters along the coast have made towns like Hingham, attractive places for the turkeys to call home.

"People call me and say, 'They're in my yard — what do I do?'" says Paul Murphy, who is the animal control officer in both Cohasset and Norwell.

"I say, 'Take a picture,'" Murphy quips about the birds, which he describes as "spectacular." He also explains there is little he can do about the burgeoning turkey population, because wild turkeys come under the jurisdiction of Massachusetts Department of Fisheries and Wildlife unless they pose a threat to health or safety.

Wild turkeys seem to be everywhere.

Turkey complaints in Middleton last spring prompted the town administrator there to issue a press release informing residents the animal control officer had no jurisdiction over the problem and that MassWildlife would not relocate the birds because they were in their natural habitat.

The birds have also migrated to the Boston area and have been known to stop traffic along VFW Parkway. Last spring, the Boston Animal Control office fielded twice as many calls for wild turkeys than for coyotes or foxes, which are also prevalent.

Complaints about aggressive behavior are likely to increase in the spring, which is mating season. The call of the tom turkey — or gobbler — can be heard for up to a mile as he advertises for hens. Toms can be aggressive but it's mostly bluff, says Bill Davis, wildlife biologist with MassWildlife.

The birds were widespread in the state during colonial times, but due to increased settlements, over hunting and depletion of hardwood forests, the turkey all but disappeared 150 years ago.

But thanks to MassWildlife, which obtained permission to trap some birds from New York, 35 wild turkeys were reintroduced to Berkshire County in Massachusetts 30 years ago, Davis says.

A few years later, in-state transplants of the birds help the population spread, and the state now boasts upwards of 18,000 wild turkeys.

Today they are so abundant; there is a limited hunting season to manage the numbers. In Plymouth and Norfolk counties, which are still trying to conserve the female birds, turkey hunting of male birds is allowed from April 29-May 11. A few counties, mostly in the western part of the state, allow "either sex" to be hunted in the fall.

Davis says the turkeys, which are not migratory, can become a nuisance if they are tearing up your flowers or vegetable garden.

Cindy Prentice of Triphammer Road near Wompatuck State Park in Hingham is used to seeing wildlife. But this spring the courtship dance between two male turkeys and a female in her backyard was something to behold.

She could tell the males apart (they never appeared at the same time) because one had a blue face.

"They were very entertaining," she said. The only part of their visit that was bothersome was the gobbling at 4:45 a.m.

"Quarter to six, I can handle," she says. "I'm not a 4:45 a.m. kind of person."

Prentice said her seven-year-old daughter was fascinated by the wild birds, which were what the Pilgrims would have caught and eaten back in the 1600s.

A flock of turkeys are out for a stroll along Enterprise Drive in Marshfield. The birds, which were reintroduced to the state 30 years ago, are a wildlife restoration success story.

Scare tactics

If a homeowner wants to be less welcoming to turkey visitors, Davis of MassWildlife recommends fencing, cleaning up around bird feeders or shutting down a bird-feeding station temporarily. As a scare tactic, a garden hose works well, banging on a garage-can lid or a dog on a tether can also do the job.

"Ninety-five percent of the time, food is the issue," Davis says about what attracts the birds to someone's yard.

Davis says in the spring the males have been known to attack hubcaps or sliding glass doors, because they see their reflection and think another male has invaded their territory. They can also become aggressive toward colors, particularly red, white and blue — colors they display when gobbling — and have acted out against a postal truck or two, he says.

But while they can be intimidating, it's mostly display, Davis explains. They are unlikely to bite and their chief weapon, which is defensive in nature, is the spur on the back of their feet. The male birds sport beards, which are feathers that look like bristles of a broom and hang down from the chest. Turkeys roost in trees at night to protect themselves from predators.

Currie, the Hingham animal control officer, said he hasn't received many complaints about turkeys which are established all over Hingham, including Wompatuck State Park.

And in the rare instance that Currie has had to respond to a complaint about a turkey being a potential threat to public health or safety — the birds are hard to catch, he explains. They can run up to 20 mph and are good fliers over a short distance.

Davis says the turkey is here to stay.

"Education is our best tool," Davis says about co-existing with wild turkeys. "It's a native bird and has taken its rightful place here — one that was lost due to our errors of the past."

He explained the fees from hunting and fishing licenses paid for the reestablishment of the wild turkey in Massachusetts.

For those who do hunt, the birds are a delicacy, Davis says. The meat is leaner than your typical supermarket "Butterball" turkey, and the legs tend to be tougher because of all the walking around they do.

"But the breast meat is elegant," he says.

Davis says Benjamin Franklin wanted the turkey to be the national bird.

"He realized the turkey is a noble, native bird," he says.

Group brainstorms on vision for town

Brown also went around the room asking each attendee to share their concerns about Cohasset.

For example, Peter Pratt of Ripley Road, who serves on the Planning Board, is worried the last large tract of commercially zoned land in town will be lost to apartments under the state's Chapter 40 B affordable housing law. AvalonBay is eyeing the parcel for such a development.

Alix White of Jerusalem Road, a former member of the Board of Health, is concerned about safety along Route 3A, which is a mix of commercial and residential areas. She'd also like to see more sidewalks to link areas around town.

Dick Karoff of Border Street doesn't want to see the harbor area totally taken over by business.

And Selectman Fred Koed of Pleasant Street wants to see some protection against "mansionization" in neighborhoods from either new homes or additions to old ones that are out of scale with the other houses.

Clark Brewer of North Main Street, who sits on the Growth & Development Committee, said he was interested in the "nuts and bolts" of the implementation plan and wanted the Master Plan to focus on what can really be done to make the vision a reality.

Jim Dedes of South Main Street, who is chairman of the Conservation Commission, said 3A should be a priority. He noted the train station is going to create more traffic issues; a police station could eventually relocate there and Avalon Bay wants to build some 254 apartments off the state highway.

More working groups will be planned in the months ahead. A draft Master Plan, which will be presented to a public meeting, will be ready by winter with the final plan expected by early 2003. Any proposals for zoning changes would go before Town Meeting.

Town Planner Liz Harrington said it was critical to pull as many interests into the process as possible in order to develop a consensus around concepts that can be supported.

Courting the new runway

million-dollar-plus mitigation settlements involving noise, vibration and other environmental impacts with communities along the 17-mile right-of-way. The town-by-town deals stopped some lawsuits from moving ahead.

But there seems to be no such "working relationship" between several South Shore towns and some Boston municipalities — and Massport — the state authority that oversees Logan Airport.

Massport wants to expand Logan by building a new runway, which is says will reduce delays. There also appears to be few vocal proponents of the project, outside Massport itself.

The runway is now headed to court – not once, but twice – in both Suffolk and Plymouth counties.

William Golden, a local attorney who was hired by area towns to fight the proposed new Logan Airport runway which would add thousands of flights a day over Hingham, Hull and Cohasset, said this should be no surprise.

"The arrogance of Massport and its unwillingness to enter into a meaningful dialogue on existing and future operations has led to the adversarial relationship between it and surrounding communities," he said.

Last week a Suffolk Superior Court judge refused Massport's request to lift the 25-year-old injunction stopping a new runway, and instead sent the matter to trial. The judge's decision was viewed as a victory by Boston-based CARE (Communities Against Runway Expansion). A trial date is expected to be announced next week.

Last month, a Plymouth Superior Court judge denied Massport's attempt to dismiss the case launched by Hull, which is the lead community in the coalition of South Shore towns opposed to the runway. The suit goes to trial in October, alleging Massport's negligent operation of the airport constitutes a public nuisance and the new runway would results in "unnecessary and unreasonable exacerbation of a continuing and repeated public nuisance." Local runway opponents also viewed this judge's ruling as a win for their side.

However, Massport officials continue to put a positive spin on the events, saying they welcome an airing of the facts in a court of law.

Massport spokeswoman Barbara Platt said from Massport's perspective, the trial on the injunction leaves the door open to either lifting or modifying the injunction.'

"We plan to move forward and present an exhaustive case and layout the facts in the trial," she said. Platt explained the injunction was initially put in place back in 1974 when new environmental laws were taking effect and there was some question whether Massport complied with the proper environmental review.

But now, after a nearly 10-year process, Massport has completed a new environmental review and has a certificate in hand from the state Secretary of Environmental Affairs.

"We believe the project will stand on its own merits," she said.

But Golden says Massport is in a jam.

"There's well-funded and well organized opposition to Massport on two fronts," Golden said, referring to legal action in Suffolk and Plymouth counties. The Suffolk case is being funded by the City of Boston, Chelsea, Somerville and Winthrop. In addition to Hingham, Hull and Cohasset, Revere is participating in the Plymouth lawsuit.

He said there has been no dialogue with Massport to mitigate impacts especially on the South Shore, such as flight path changes to reduce noise and pollution. Golden said Massport, which he described as having "callous disregard of impacts," is now in jeopardy of having its current operations restricted.

"There needs to be a new day at Massport," he says.

Cohasset voters appropriated $30,000 toward the runway lawsuit at their annual Town Meeting in March bringing that town's total for the runway fight to $78,500.

Last month, Hingham Town Meeting supported a warrant article calling for appropriating an additional $100,000 to fight the project bringing that town's total to $178,500. While some Hingham residents have questioned further appropriations in the past, runway opponents pointed out that a $100,000 appropriation equated to $5 per resident — a small investment, they say, considering the problems the runway would bring, including increased noise and air pollution.

Planning Board is cool to CRC's harbor plans

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

If a recent Planning Board meeting is a gauge, then plans to improve the harbor area have an uphill battle.

Dean Rizzo, executive director of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, presented three different options for the board to mull over last week.

Although the board delayed taking an official position on CRC's proposals until its next meeting, some had plenty to say.

"With the Growth and Development committee working on the master plan I think it's premature to do anything to the area," said board member Bob Sturdy. "It's not appropriate to do anything now."

Sturdy went on to say the CRC, a private non-profit corporation working on village and harbor improvements, may be overstepping its bounds.

"The fact is the CRC is a private entity," Sturdy said. "This is not the town's planning board."

The meeting, which was contentious at times, also drew members from the Friends of the Harbor group – which has expressed opposition to the CRC — as well as members of other interest groups in the harbor, such as the sailing club and some lobstermen.

While Planning Board chairman Al Moore saw some good ideas in Rizzo's presentation, he said it was too early to recommend any plan yet.

"There is a lot more serious discussion that needs to take place before we give it our recommendation," Moore said. "We have serious questions about the funding of the projects."

The cost for the projects varies among the different options.

• One option would make no improvements with the exception of new asphalt patching to fill the reoccurring potholes. The existing walkway and infrastructure conditions would remain as they are today.

"This approach does not address safety issues associated with irregular and narrow sidewalk surfaces or vehicles parking on walkway areas," Rizzo said. "It also doesn't take aim at the open design of the existing railing system and general infrastructure disrepair in within the waterfront area."

"There is a lot more serious discussion that needs to take place before we give it our recommendation."
— Planning Board Chairman Al Moore

• Another option Rizzo outlined in his presentation involved "minimum improvement" to the harbor. This consists of replacing the existing asphalt sidewalk surfaces and installing a curbing system to separate the sidewalk from parking areas. This does not include lighting, railing, sidewalk width or road width changes. Because the changes don't address safety issues, the project wouldn't be considered for either state or federal funding leaving the cost on taxpayers, he said. Rizzo estimates the cost of the project to be a little more than $300,000 – a price tag which would be largely the town's responsibility.

• The third option would provides the highest level of public safety and access improvements. Along with the amenities in the second option, this proposal involves installation of new lighting, tree planting, the installation of a new wood or steel railing system and minor repairs of existing sidewalks. The estimated cost of this plan is about $1.1 million but with grant funding, Rizzo said, 90 percent of the cost may be covered. The town would have to cover would be about $110,000, significantly less than the "minimum improvement" plan.

"I think the last plan would be the best for the town and would do the most for the harbor area," Rizzo said.

However, there are some, who feel minimal improvement would be best.

Dick Karoff, a member of the Friends of the Harbor, said he was pleased Rizzo presented three options but said he was still not satisfied.

"I'm not seeing a lot of popular support for the changing of the area," Karoff said in a later interview. "I don't think anyone wants to see the harbor look much different than it does."

Karoff also said funding for the projects is less certain than Rizzo presented.

"It seems to me the state of Massachusetts is having significant monetary problems," Karoff said. "I don't know how willing they are going to be to donate a lot of money to fix our harbor."

Karoff added he would just like to see an updated surface on the sidewalk to fix the potholes and doesn't feel there is any safety issues.

"There has never been an accident there that I know of," he said.

Rizzo said many people have expressed to him that there are safety concerns at the area from rolling baby carriages over the rugged surface to teens riding bikes in the area.

"We want to prevent any accidents in the future," Rizzo said. "The harbor is beautiful, but the environment around it needs work."

Rizzo said he plans to send out a packet that outlines the three separate options along with a survey that will allow for a response to the options. He is going to send it to the some 130 abutters to the harbor as well as various town boards by the end of the week.

Post office food drive for local pantry is Saturday

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Summer means vacations for some families and a struggle to put food on the table for others.

During the summer months, local food pantries, which are usually well stocked during the rest of the year, find donations dropping off.

That's why the National Association of Letter Carriers (NALC), Branch 34 – in conjunction with the United States Postal Service, AFL-CIO and the United Way – is sponsoring a food drive Saturday, May 11.

As part of that effort, Cohasset postal customers may place non-perishable food items by their mailboxes that day. Among the most needed are pasta, cereal, canned vegetables and soup, juice, and rice.

Dennis Reardon of the Cohasset Post Office is organizing the food drive this year.

"Just tell everybody to give," he said.

The donations will be picked up at the same time mail is delivered.

Last year, postal customers in Cohasset donated more than 1,700 pounds of non-perishable items.

Nationwide, more than 70 million pounds were collected last year.

The effort is the largest one-day collection of food in the nation's history.

NACL first participated in the drive about eight years ago. NACL, in conjunction with the United States Postal Service, AFL-CIO, United Way, Saturn automobile dealerships, and Campbell's Soup developed a food delivery system in all 50 states which allows residents along postal routes to donate non-perishable food items and paper goods for local food banks in a convenient way.

Over the years, millions of pounds of food have been collected, sorted and delivered to local food pantries through the effort.

Annual barbecue on Memorial Day

The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation invites everyone for hamburgers, hot dogs, soft drinks or coffee immediately following the Memorial Day Parade on May 27, at Bancroft Hall on Government Island.

The generosity of Cohasset residents and others provided the funds for renovation.

The non-profit Lightkeepers Corporation was established in 1991 to renovate a former two-family lightkeepers' residence, no longer used as such because of automation of Minot's Light, and convert it into a function room for community use. The building is leased from the town but maintained and operated by the Lightkeepers Corporation.

The generosity of Cohasset residents and others provided the funds for renovation. Operating and maintenance expenses, and reserves for capital replacements or improvements, are recovered from rental of two apartments on the second floor, and from fees charged to non-residents for use of the function room facilities. Cohasset residents may use the facilities for a nominal fee, and non-profit organizations at no charge.

This will be the sixth year that CLC has hosted Memorial Day attendees in recognition of the generosity of our supporters and we expect to serve over 1000 people again.

Alzheimer's support

On Wednesday, May 15, at 7:30 p.m., the Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore presents James Wessler, executive director of the Massachusetts Chapter of the Alzheimer's Association, who will present "Living with Alzheimer's Disease: Resources for Patient and Family."

Wessler has wide experience in the field and heads up the ever-expanding services of the Massachusetts Chapter that includes legislation, collaboration with state agencies as well as direct family services.

Meetings are held at the Hingham Senior Center, 220 Central St. For further information, call Toni Abbott, 781-749-1823 or Joe Willard at 781-749-0795.

Respite care for the patient is available at no cost during the meeting at Harbor House in Hingham so that the family may attend this lecture. To reserve respite care, call Gervaise Haley at 781-749-4774, Ext. 843 by 3 p.m. May 15.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

DON'T LIKE SNAKES

Hello Cohasset. How is everyone doing in this beautiful month of May? It is so nice to be outside enjoying the nice weather with only a few exceptions. Ticks, bugs and snakes are everywhere and as you might have guessed, I hate snakes and they always seem to find me. I think they were quite busy over the long, dull winter as they seem to have multiplied by the hundreds. I had one go over my foot in my front yard the other day and to everyone around me, it was pretty funny, I however did not agree at all. Oh well, the great weather definitely outweighs the snakes and is worth a little slithering around.

SOME SUGGESTIONS

This week, I have received quite a few phone calls and emails about several issues that people want to share with others. One of them is a direct and very important request to make sure that all children are properly seat-belted or in appropriate car seats at all times and that any child younger than 12 be in the back seat.

Another important request that was sent was to remind and urge everyone to make sure and use your blinkers when making turns. According to this caller, she had several near-miss accidents all within one hour while driving through town.

The last message was one that has to do with all the fundraisers that are happening in town and how to deal with them all. I have gone back and forth on whether to talk about this in the column and as you can see, I decided to talk.

The email that I received was initially a very negative one regarding the "constant barrage" from organizations and groups asking for money for this cause or that cause and the writer wanted me to ask for it to stop through my column. I replied to him that no, I would not ask for it to stop but would think about how to address it in a way that made sense to many.(I hope.) I then told him my views on fundraising and after several back and forth emails, he said that he will take a look at each fundraiser that comes his way and make a choice to participate or not.

As we all know, there are many groups, schools and programs that require additional monies at one time or another and fundraisers are a wonderful way for an organization to obtain funds. I really feel that instead of complaining or feeling angry about being asked, we could take a stand of listening and then making our own personal choice of whether to participate in that particular fundraiser. I also think that another great suggestion was to decide each year how much you want to spend on fundraisers, which organizations you want to contribute to and then when the money is gone, so is your ability to keep saying yes. Just a few things for everyone to think about, I know that I am going to.

Play makes you think about life

Local man inspired at Berkshires retreat

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

"The Fever" is coming to Cohasset. No, not a dreaded disease, but a one-man play that takes aim at a variety of social issues.

Zed Pine will perform the 100-minute monologue at Town Hall on Saturday, May 25.

The show was written by Wallace Shawn, who co-wrote "My Dinner with Andre," and has been described as a powerful depiction of one man's struggle with his conscience.

Pine, who is a storyteller and actor and has performed in America, Germany and Great Britain, said the play floored him when he saw it for the first time.

"I was completely entranced," he said. "It is so beautifully written and the subject matter is so poignant."

Pine, who performs the play about once a month, said memorizing almost two hours worth of material was a long process. He added he finally feels as if he's on the right track with the play.

One of the interesting aspects of the play is there are no props and no stage, the only other people in the theatre are the audience. Pine said there is no misconception about a fourth wall in the play.

"I'm essentially a storyteller," he said. "It's a dialogue with the audience."

Pine is finding his way to Cohasset through Howie Altholz, a resident of Summer Street. Altholz was on a retreat at the Kripalu Yoga Center in the Berkshires when he caught Pine's performance.

The conference, which featured speakers ranging from Ghandi's grandson to Julia Butterfly Hill (who lived in a Redwood tree for two-years), was aimed at exploring one's lifestyle. Altholz said "The Fever" was the highlight of the five-day retreat.

"The play really makes you examine how you live," he said. "It makes you examine how your life impacts other people."

Altholz felt the play, which also deals with poverty and the interrelationships between the have and the have-nots, is a positive force in light of the wave of recent tragedies.

"This is a great vehicle to help people try and realize what's important in life."
— Howie Altholz, Summer Street

"It's the kind of thing we all need right now," he said. "This is a great vehicle to help people try and realize what's important in life."

Altholz is funding the production himself and said he thought the play was good enough to warrant his support. There will no be tickets sold for the event but there is a suggested $5-$10 donation at the door. All proceeds will benefit the Wellspring MultiService Center in Hull and the Cohasset Food Pantry. Seating is on a first-come, first-serve basis.

Pine, who views the play as a masterpiece of how to put language together in a powerful manner, also performs in the Berkshire's Shakespeare and Company acting troupe as well as a touring company, dubbed the Bigger Light.

The review for the plays have been excellent so far. The New York Times said, "The Fever is a work that asks, in a highly original way: is it possible, or even right, for a sensitive person to be happy in today's world."

The New Yorker had similar praise for the play: "One of American theatre's finest prose stylist and most subversive playwrights, Shawn's play is a battle of conscience and contradiction in which there is no truth."

Showing art the hard(ware) way

New gallery opens in village

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The access is off South Main Street inside Cohasset Hardware. You enter the store then take a left, walk by the light bulbs and the paint brushes and head toward the right, passing the hand saws. Then you trudge up the old stairs and surprisingly, an art gallery looms ahead.

Art Moves, which is on the second floor above the hardware store, offers visitors an opportunity to explore and purchase anything from paintings to continental currency.

"People are rewarded when they come up the steps, it's a fun experience."
— David Alexander, Art Moves

Its owner, David Alexander, is renting the space from Tina and Jim Watson who own the hardware store. Alexander said he realizes the situation is a unique one.

"It's definitely unusual to have an art studio above a hardware store," Alexander said. "But people are rewarded when they come up the steps, it's a fun experience."

The studio/gallery offers Alexander a place to paint as well as sell an eclectic mix of art. Along with his maritime paintings, one can find, models such as airplanes and remote controlled sail boats in the space. The gallery also features fossils and precious stones, such as emeralds and topaz, as well as imported jars from Costa Rica.

"I want people to come up here and be able to have a complete experience," Alexander said. "I wanted to offer as much as possible."

The open, airy, sun-lit room offers him a perfect place to display his art.

"It's bright and cheerful," he said. "It's so open it provides me an opportunity to do a lot of different things."

Jim Watson says it's a perfect symbiotic relationship.

"It's working out really well," he said. "It's nice having the studio upstairs."

Alexander, who describes himself as a representationalist artist, said he looks at reality and then tries to bring its special qualities out in his work. He pays exceptional attention to detail as is evident by the various portraits depicting exquisite sea storms.

"To me, art is a form of communication designed to enhance our lives," he said. "I try to take what's special about life and make it more so."

Alexander, who plans to open the gallery to the public by the end of the month, is currently working on a couple commissioned pieces. He said this is his preferred style of working.

"I'm flattered if someone likes what I've done," he said. "But I think creating something from the customer vision is really wonderful."

He added he plans on doing shows for all kinds of artists. He says the studio will always have fine and decorative art.

"We will be constantly changing our store," he said. "It will look different from one month to the next." Although Alexander is a talented artist, he wasn't always involved with genre. He served as a wine consultant for 20 years before changing career paths.

"I didn't want to stand in front of St. Peter and have him ask me what I did with the talent he gave me and have to tell him 'nothing,'" he said.

Alexander said he needed to make a decision with how to proceed with his life. He said he enjoyed being a wine consultant and was very educated in the matter but it wasn't his calling.

"I wanted to make sure I took advantage of what I was put on earth to do."

Alexander said he wants to appeal to both kids and adults in his store.

"Parents can come up here with their kids and just browse for some time," he said. "Everybody can have a good time."

Alexander was born and raised in Cohasset and lives in town with his wife, Cindy, and their two children Justin and Kristin.

OPINION

Mothers are forever

"Whenever I held my newborn baby in my arms, I used to think that what I said and did to him could have an influence not only on him but on all whom he met, not only for a day or a month or a year, but for all eternity — a very, very challenging and exciting thought for a mother."

These words, spoken by Rose Kennedy, are quoted in her 1971 biography by Gail Cameron.

What greater challenge than to raise a child!

What a daunting challenge!

The four sons of Rose Kennedy —a president, a war hero, an attorney general, and a senator — surely changed American history for all time. Her daughters also influenced untold lives.

Each spirit entering life is like a pebble tossed into a pond, creating ripples to the distant shore.

It is the mother's hand that is the earliest guiding force to where these ripples lead.

Mothers are as different from one another as wildflowers growing in a field, yet they all hope for the same thing: a happy and healthy life for their child.

Sometimes children have a hard time putting into words their love for their mothers.

But little acts can speak louder than words — a hug, a kiss, a ragged-edged bouquet of dandelions clutched in a small fist.

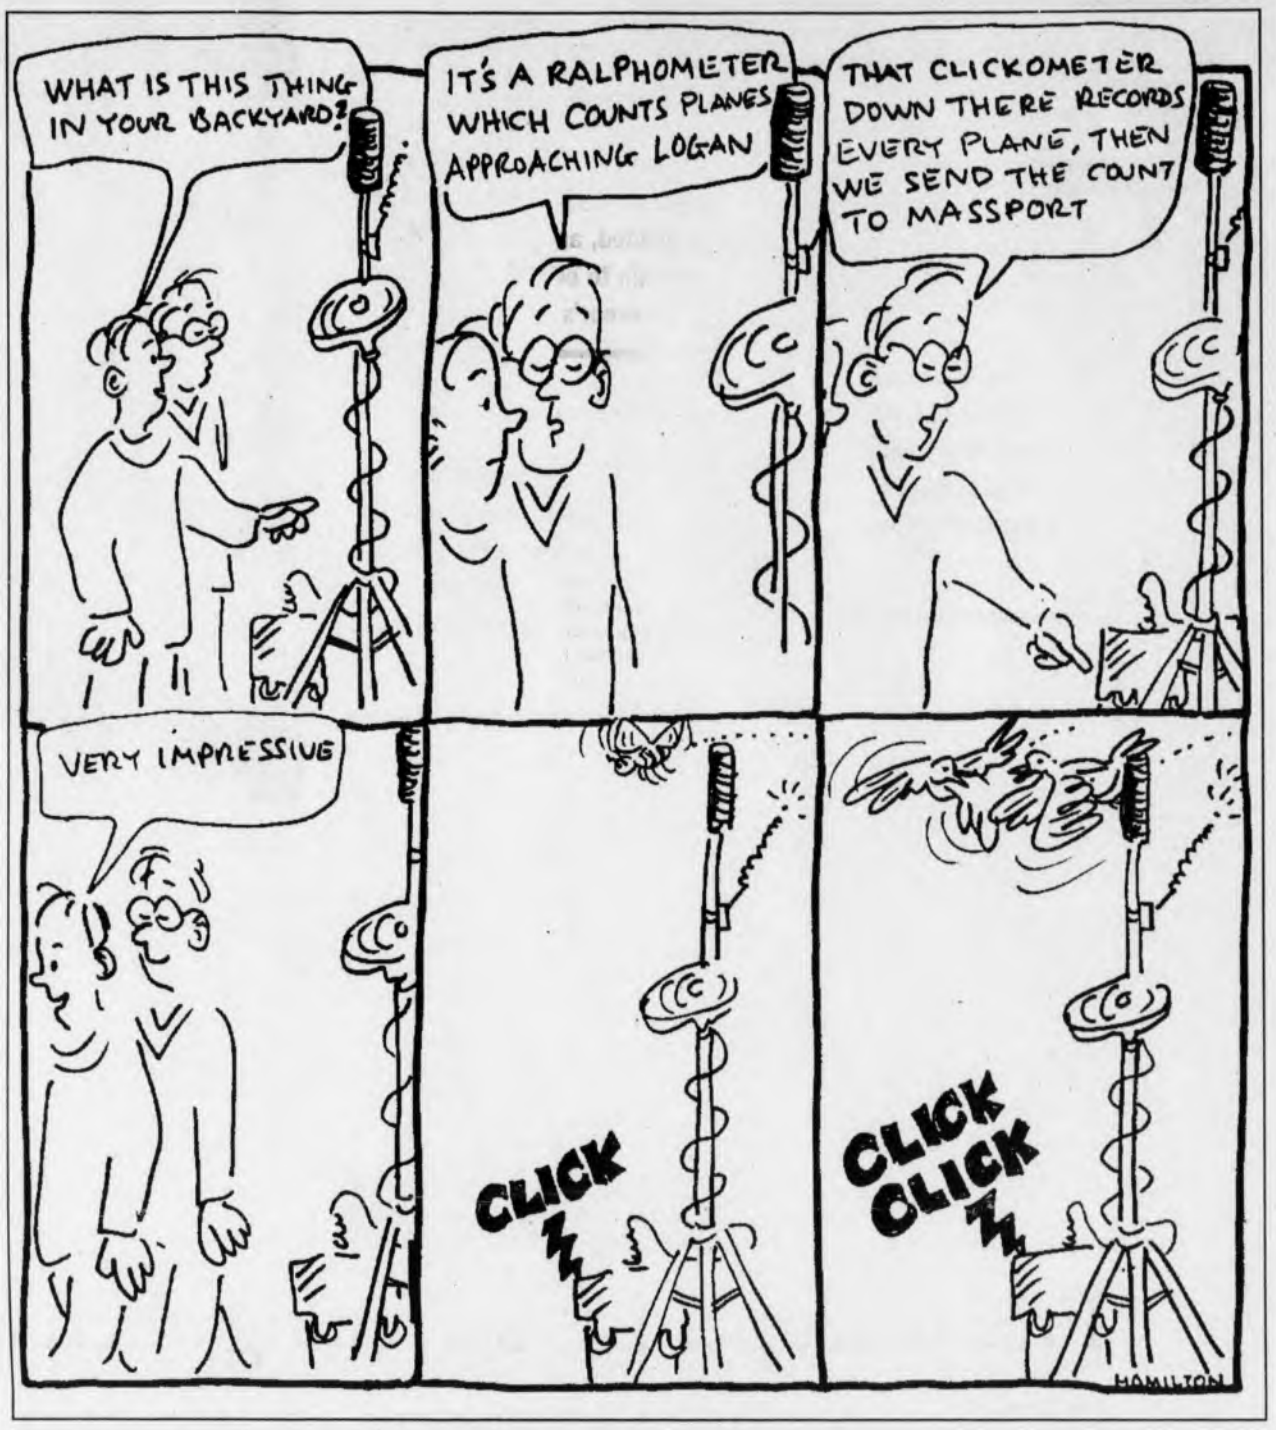
With Mothers Day this Sunday, expressions of affection pour forth like the sun on a bright spring morning and every mother feels in her heart that the greatest award she can ever win is the expression of love from her child, whether this love is expressed by word, action, poem, or picture.

Every time a baby is born, a mother is full of dreams for his or her future.

"Bringing a child into the world is the greatest act of hope there is," Louise Hart wrote in her 1987 book, "The Winning Family: Increasing Self-Esteem in Your Child and Yourself."

On Sunday, in homes all across town, a mother's dreams come true when she receives that expression of love from her child or when her children gather around her.

Whether it is breakfast in bed of burned toast and dripping orange juice, or a breakfast buffet, a card done in wobbly crayons or a glittery one from the store, whether there is a handmade gift or a diamond necklace — on Mothers Day, it is truly the thought that counts.



How to display Old Glory

- On a vehicle – Attach the flag to the antenna or clamp the flagstaff to the right fender. Do not lay the flag over the vehicle.
- On a building – Hang the flag on a staff or on a rope over the sidewalk with the stars away from the building.
- Over the street – Hang the flag with the stars to the east on a north-south street or north on an east-west street.
- Above other flags – Hang the flag above any other flag on the same pole
- Other flags, separate poles – Hang all flags on equal poles. Hang the U.S. flag on its own right, hoist it first and lower it last.
- In a window – Hang the flag vertically with the stars to the left of anyone looking at it from the street.
- Half-mast – This is a sign of mourning. Raise the flag to the top of the pole then lower it to the half way point. Before lowering the flag, raise it to the top again at the end of the day.
- Upside down – An upside-down flag is considered a distress signal.
- Multiple staffs – If you display the flag on a staff with other flags around it, place the flag at the center and highest point. Crossed staffs - Keep the flagstaff higher and on its own right.
- In a hall or lobby – Hang the flag vertically across from the main entrance with the stars to the left of anyone coming through the door.

CRC's village vision criticized

TO THE EDITOR:

Early in the last century, Henry Ford was supposed to have said that purchasers of his marvelous new Model T automobile could have it in any color they wanted — so long as it was black. That story is probably apocryphal.

Very real, however, is the current proposal by the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation that Cohasset residents be allowed to have any kind of lamppost in the village center so long as it is black, metal and ornate. (See the CRC display of sidewalk treatments and lamppost styles, all black and metal and ornate, installed next to the Texaco station in the village center, to which the CRC asks for reactions from residents.) No one can responsibly suggest that these Victorian adornments are suitable to the style of a colonial village.

Except for the area surrounding the town common we do not have in Cohasset the appearance constraints of a Sturbridge Village or a Colonial Williamsburg, or even a Deerfield. People are largely free to design homes and buildings in styles to please themselves. Notwithstanding that comfortable degree of freedom, which has admittedly produced non-colonial homes and buildings here and there, graces and styles still suffuse this lovely town which make clear its overall colonial heritage.

The proposals of the CRC, however, relate not merely to a building here or a home there, but to the overall appearance of the village. Black, metal, ornate lampposts throughout the village will forever compromise its appearance. The CRC proposal to fancy the town up with Victorian decoration will never turn Cohasset into a smart, Victorian center, but will simply sacrifice its colonial simplicity. It will be neither one thing nor the other, but a mongrelization of styles. There are many ways to enhance the graces of the town, but it has become obvious that the CRC is not competent to accomplish it.

How is it, after all, that the CRC seems to be taking the role of town planner? There are town government entities that have various responsibilities for planning — the Planning Board, Zoning Board of Appeals, Board of Selectmen, the Town Meeting, to name several. In general, they seem to be doing their jobs well, and they are accountable to the residents. Why do we need, in addition to all of that, flawed poll-taking by a private body that is clearly not accountable to the residents? Moreover, work is well along on a Master Plan for the town. Do we really want to make major decisions about the overall appearance of the town at the behest of the CRC without waiting to see what is proposed in the Master Plan?

We are not, of course, required to retain the colonial character of Cohasset. I, for one, would be sad to see it go. But if we do abandon it, I hope it will be as a result of a deliberate decision for well reasoned considerations presented to all the residents, and not as the result of slanted sidewalk polling.

Planning thoughts

TO THE EDITOR:

After attending the Public Visions and Goals meeting Saturday, I reviewed the agenda in the Cohasset Compass over the weekend. I concluded that the town needs to define all important natural and structural elements. Many are taken for granted but their existence will be affected by the year 2020.

The best way for me to define this issue is to use the game: rock, paper and scissors for reference. This is not about who wins or loses but choosing the highest priority and not the most convenient. We all know that Cohasset means long, rocky shore, and so, the town has an obligation to protect its natural resource (unless it is on someone's property.)

This brings to mind the issue of removing ledge below St. Stephen's Church for sidewalks and pedestrian safety. However, it does not address the safety issue for vehicles. The long term solution for people and automobiles could be remedied by placing a stop sign on Depot Court and removing some of the angled parking on Main Street — ledge removal necessary for sidewalks.

For the money and contracts paper item, I turn to the Paul Pratt Library building. This is not about whether the library should move or should expand where it is currently, it is about the town keeping the landmark building. Where is the creative thinking that came up with the $400,000 for two little league baseball diamonds at the Gravel Pits? Future use could be a satellite police station, library extension site that has museum displays from the historic society or visitor center. It is not too late, is it?

Scissors cut and bring change. In following the real estate market in town, several properties on Border Street with direct views of Bryant's Cove and the Gulf River are selling for more than a million dollars. (For some reason I thought only property with ocean views had added value.) I have appreciated the same postcard view from the Border Street bridge. It is all based on the combination of rock, water, foliage and this white-trimmed red house with a large eagle painted on the side. Everything in the scene is within the domain of the town but the color of the house. This is the challenge of the town, working with residents to show how consistency and integrity in improvements are part of the value and heritage of the town.

Cohasset can take the lead by dealing with little things such as when is it okay to take a little ledge to make something better, and not because it is in the way. As in the game — rock, paper and scissors, the way for everyone to win big is to anticipate the future and have fun guessing. But we need to get those hands moving.

LIBRARY CORNER

Needs assessment

Tell us what you want. If you attended Town Meeting, you may have noticed and used one of the library questionnaires asking your opinion on what materials and services you would like your library to offer.

If you missed that survey chance, you can still give the library your input. Stop by the library and fill out one of the new "Needs Assessment" forms. The library's aim is to make sure it is meeting the community needs, supplying the types of materials and formats that Cohasset residents would most use.

The library is also looking for your guidance in planning programs and activities that it might sponsor when it moves into its spacious new building. Please take this opportunity to let the library know how to serve your better.

Great gift idea

Legislature has taxing week on Beacon Hill

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

Recap and analysis of the week in state government week ending May 3.

Why tax cigarettes to balance the budget, but not alcohol?

It's a minor mystery, one of many afoot during a curious and, shall we say, taxing week on Beacon Hill. Most of the mysteries could be described but not completely cleared up.

For example – and this was a major, not a minor, point to ponder – why was it so hard for the House leadership to find a majority for the $1 billion increase said to be necessary? After all, a number of the fundamental elements of a tax debate had been turned on their head in comparison to 1990, the last time a big tax package cleared the House.

Unlike 1990, business groups were clearly saying they and the state would be better off if the Legislature raised taxes, including taxes that affect business and investments. Very, very unlike 1990, legislators were hearing a significant volume of requests from constituents, not that they should cut the budget or avoid tax increases, but that they should raise revenues to minimize cuts.

"Throw the bums out" was a threat applied this week to those who would cut instead of tax – and that's utterly at variance with what things were like around here in 1990. Not only that, but for the first time in the post-Dukakis era, the Republican governor was no longer committed to the no-new-taxes pledge – a huge reversal in the status quo.

And another thing – the conventional wisdom says politicians shun tax hikes out of fear for their jobs, but the vast majority of the people raising the taxes won't be punished for it at the ballot box, at least not this year. That's another mystery: this would seem to be a propitious year to run as a Republican (a budget crisis and an attractive figure at the top of the ticket), but only 60 GOP challengers for 200 legislative seats are on the ballot.

So given all that, why did Tom Finneran and his leadership team have to take such a long time crunching numbers – not tax-revenue numbers, but the number of representatives willing to vote "yes" to the $1 billion increase? Inside the building, that was a major theme of the week – with the winds seeming to prevail so strongly in favor of tax hikes, people were surprised the initial proposals were blown away in closed-door caucuses.

The Dan Duquette theory is one intriguing explanation. It states that between Duquette, the ousted general manager of the Red Sox, and Cardinal Bernard Law, the beleaguered leader of the Boston Catholic Archdiocese, Bay Staters have witnessed so many years of poor decision making by leaders of their high-visibility institutions they're not about to trust Finneran's pronouncements on the need for new revenue.

The final tally was just one more surprise: 131-23, far wider than expected, and way more than enough to override the acting governor's promised veto.

More substantive is the explanation proffered by Daniel Bosley, the North Adams representative who could well succeed Finneran as Speaker some day. Bosley said it took a long time to find a mix of modest increases totaling $1 billion, each of them tolerable to a majority of members. That's the path to success – not a huge increase in one area, Bosley said. But as the week proved, it can be torturous. "Your goal is have everyone slightly unhappy," Bosley said.

That goal was achieved, apparently. The final tally was just one more surprise: 131-23, far wider than expected, and way more than enough to override the acting governor's promised veto.

Amidst all the maneuvering, vote counting and debate, other stories did manage to make their way into the headlines:

This and that

• Martha Sosman of the Supreme Judicial Court refused to allow Clean Elections proponents to seize the office furniture of their nemeses in the House. It could still happen, but Sosman told the plaintiffs, "Your desire to levy these particular items is clearly driven by motives that are unrelated to the money." Plaintiffs said the court should demonstrate that legislators, as possessors of furniture of value and subject to seizure, are not protected from facing the consequences of their failure to fund the law.

• The acting governor's eyes misted as she listened to the mother of Molly Bish, the missing teenage lifeguard from Warren. Maggie Bish praised Swift at a press conference Tuesday to announce the convening of a 25-member task force to help sexual assault victims. It will be led by Public Safety Secretary James Jajuga and will focus on making sure services for victims are appropriate and adequate.

• A term-limiting proposal covering judges was added to a short Constitutional Convention calendar. Judges now serve in their appointments until the legally mandated retirement age of 70; the bill filed by Rep. Michael Cahill (D-Beverly) would require them to seek reappointment every six years. Because it was not voted on, the bill received an "ought not to pass" recommendation from the Judiciary Committee under the automatic-discharge rule. Also placed on the calendar was Rep. Jay Kaufman's amendment to have the lieutenant governor's post filled in the case of a vacancy. The last lieutenant governor to finish a four-year term was Evelyn Murphy in 1991. The next ConCon is scheduled for June 19.

• The Legislature took no action by the statutory deadline on proposals ending the bilingual education system in Massachusetts and abolishing the income tax, so supporters of those ballot initiatives can move them to the November ballot by collecting another 9,517 signatures.

• Linda Ruthardt, one of the most familiar names in state government through her nine years as insurance commissioner, was named to another key post this week: head of the Division of Health Care Finance and Policy. DHCF gathers data and sets some rates for health care providers.

• State officials looking for a new inspector general say they expect to fill the post by July 1. The state's attorney general, auditor and governor are charged with picking a successor to IG Robert Cerasoli, who left office on June 30, 2001, when his second five-year term expired.

• The GOP lieutenant governor candidate, having made a name for herself as Kerry Murphy Healey and Mitt Romney's running mate, announced she's dropping the "Murphy" for simplicity's sake. The commentariat pointed out the apparent abandonment of a bid to display the common touch by trying to be known as "Mitt and Murph".

Ultimate in how-to books!

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Boy, Osama bin Laden and his minions better not come nosing around my place now that I have my own copy of the latest catalogue from the Paladin Press' Action Library!

It's 92 pages of sheer delight for every red-blooded American man or boy who ever cheered and envied Sly Stallone as he wiped out regiments of them Viet Congs.

Buy a book from Paladin, read it, practice it, and you, too, can be as macho as the late John Wayne as he wrought retribution on gangs of badmen and whole Indian tribes.

How would you like to own for your very own a book called "Violence, Blunders, and Fractured Jaws: Advanced Awareness Techniques and Street Etiquette," by Marc "Animal" MacYoung?

The last guy I knew who had the qualifications to be called Animal was a Portuguese hitman named Joe Barbosa, who was whacked out in a San Francisco street after helping the FBI to frame Joe Salvati.

I guess Marc qualifies as an Animal, too, because he has also written a book called "Pool Cues, Beer Bottles, and Baseball Bats: Animal's Guide to Improvised Weapons for Self-Defense and Survival."

"This book will broaden your definition of what constitutes a weapon," hypes my catalogue, "to include rope, beer bottles, pens, pool cues, cats, tables and chairs, keys, gin and tonics, and more, plus how to actually use them."

I haven't decided which books I'll get yet, but perhaps I'll start with "Secrets of Silat," in which author Steve Gartin reveals the secrets of Indonesian knife fighting and the "little known techniques of kuntao."

You are reminded, of course, that this is "for informational purposes only." Of course.

Once I've mastered that, I'll go on to "Home Workshop Prototype Firearms: How to Design, Build, and Sell Your Own Small Arms," because I'm a "concerned citizen alarmed with the growing governmental gun-grabbing trend."

This, of course, is "for academic study only." Of course.

If small arms aren't big enough for you, there's always the BAD One, which stands for Backyard Artillery Device Model 1. So help me, Paladin sells a video tape that shows you how to make one!

The BAD One can "launch its projectiles (full beer or soft drink cans) nearly 300 yards with just a press of the button." Just the thing when a Taliban tank breaks through the back fence, although it's a shame to waste all that beer.

There's also the "Do-It-Yourself Gunpowder Cookbook," in which we are told how to make our own gunpowder "from such easily accessible items as dead cats, whiskey, your living room ceiling, manure, 'fool's gold,' and maple syrup."

I'm partial to a book called "Up Yours! A Guide to Advanced Revenge Techniques," containing the "meanest, nastiest tricks for all those people you love to hate — snakelike salesmen, crooked landlords, bungling bureaucrats, and nosy neighbors."

It's not embargoed to informational purposes or academic study, but I'd only use it on Osama bin Laden or maybe Saddam Hussein just the same — so you telemarketers can relax.

If I was to take the Al Qaedas or the Talibans alive, wouldn't it be nice to have a copy of "Make 'em Talk! Principles of Military Interrogation," on hand so that I could "acquire useful, accurate information in as little time as possible."

We are also offered the first English translation of "The Gestapo and SS Manual," providing a "rare glimpse into the actually operating procedures of the Gestapo, SS, and Waffen-SS."

And you thought the Fuhrer died in the bunker, didn't you?

Tax relief, septic and sewer systems

According to a Massachusetts general law — taxpayers who repair or replace a failed septic system may be entitled to a credit (the Title 5 credit) against personal income tax due. The credit is equal to the lesser of either forty-percent of the actual cost paid by the taxpayer to repair or replace a failed septic system, or $15,000.

If you've never been to a screening, it's simple, painless, and very useful.

In general, a septic system that is repaired or replaced must have been determined to be a "failed system" pursuant to an inspection performed prior to such repair or replacement. However, taxpayers required pursuant to a federal court order, consent decree or similar mandate from a federal court, to connect their septic system to the city or town sewer system may claim the Title 5 credit. Also, the Board of Health can write a letter verifying that an order has been issued to either repair or upgrade the system, or to hook up to the sewer.

In general, necessary and reasonable expenses paid by the taxpayer for construction, materials, machinery and equipment, demolition, relocation, design, engineering, testing and inspection relating to the repair or replacement of a septic system are the expenses that may be used by the taxpayer when claiming the credit. The credit is generally available to eligible taxpayers beginning in the tax year in which the work required to repair or replace a septic system is completed.

The credit is limited to $1,500 per year with carryover provisions over five years. To apply for this credit, request Mass tax schedule SC, fill it in, and include it with your tax submission. Contact the Board of Health for additional information about this law.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

Just a fool when it comes to relationships

MY VIEW

EVAN SCHIFF

I don't pretend to be a smart man. I know little about world politics, I couldn't tell you what the capital of Nevada is, and I try to use larger words than necessary often times negating their effect.

But I could learn about all of that. I could start reading the New York Times, take a geography course and keep a dictionary next to me while I read. But I don't know how to become smarter about being involved in relationships.

I feign knowledge, I pretend to know what I want but in reality, I'm a fool.

I'm currently dating/seeing/hanging out with this girl who is my friend/girlfriend. In recent weeks we've struggled with how to define our relationship.

Apparently, if I was her "boyfriend" this would come with an onus of responsibility. Why else would this term carry such weight?

"Are you her boyfriend?" my friends constantly ask.

"Are you dating her?" my sister-in-law starved siblings inquire.

I don't know. I really don't have a clue. We spend a lot of time together, I call her on the phone when I miss her, and I get upset when other guys surround her. But why does that have to corner me into "boyfriend" status?

For various reasons, I don't want a girlfriend and have tried to rule out that moniker for our relationship. But does the title even matter? Our relationship wouldn't change one iota if she called me her boyfriend.

All right, that may be naive. If someone asks me if I have a girlfriend and I say "no," then to them, I'm a different person. Boyfriends can get in trouble for silly things while I can simply dismiss my small blunders. Walks in the park from me are a pleasant, romantic surprise, while flowers from a boyfriend come to be expected. But it works the other way as well.

Boyfriends may get dinners cooked for them, while I don't have that luxury. Boyfriends hold some clout in the where-are-we-going-to-sleep-tonight battle, and I don't. But this illusive definition for which I'm half-heartedly seeking is only part of my confusion.

Exasperating the situation is the fact that we are two very different people.

We have a great time together, and that's about where the similarities end.

I used to be under the presumption that to date someone, you should share common interests with them. Both should like hiking, or watching TV, or reading, or whatever. Finding a special similarity with another person often spawns relationships.

However, my latest romantic endeavor has sunk that notion. We're opposite, and when I say that, think Red Sox/Yankees, or Bledsoe/Brady.

She's a physical therapist, I've made a hobby out of abusing my body. She likes dressing up, I feel a little light in the loafers when I tuck in my shirt. She likes air conditioning, I like the windows down. I could go on and on, but the point is none of this matters..

We still laugh together (maybe not at the same things), still enjoy going out to dinner together (ordering different meals), and like watching sport together (rooting for opposite teams).

We mock our differences and enjoy the looks from our group of friends who seem to have the how-are-they-in-a-relationship-together look on their faces at all times.

I think it's juvenile of me to believe that two people can be around each other without eventually falling into the trap I've described. It's human nature to want to define situations even if the definition can create more problems than it's worth. We never even got into an argument until we "needed" to discuss this.

Relationships are perpetually vexing. But perhaps, that's what makes them so exciting.

So while I may never understood love, or love lost, and the relationships that create those feelings, I can tell you for certain that the capital of Nevada is Carson City.

Evan Schiff is the staff reporter for the Cohasset Mariner.

Pratt wants train, cemetery at peace

the case at Woodside Cemetery."

He said if these barriers were destroyed with the "clear cut" width for the new railroad to the property line, it would expose monuments closest to the property line.

"I don't want to see the peaceful, serene setting of the cemetery be diminished," Pratt said this week. "The town can't let the character of the cemetery be changed."

Pratt said he is also concerned about the parking lot being constructed for the train station, which will be in close proximity to the cemetery. He said he is worried the lot may have an impact on the Gold Star Mother's monument erected last year.

"First, there may be a problem with trash with so many people being in the area," he said. "Secondly, we don't want people parking in the cemetery parking lot if the train one is full."

"As is the case on most of the abutting properties along the rail bed, 40 years of growth has created wonderful vegetated barrier, such is the case at Woodside Cemetery."
Glenn Pratt

Pratt said he wants the engineering firm to come to Cohasset and walk the property line with him and look at alternatives to the situation.

Pratt, who doesn't expect the first bulldozer in town for at least 18 months, said he is glad to get into the pipeline early. He has already received a response from Cashman-Balfour-Beatty, which told him it will be in touch shortly.

"I'll give them up to six months and then try to reconnect with them," he said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad doesn't think there will be a problem.

"We are working with all the appropriate people," he said.

Pratt said now the town has a mitigation agreement with the MBTA, it's been much different dealing with the issues involved with the Greenbush line. He isn't sure how much he can ask for until money becomes an issue. But he hopes is to have Woodside issues resolved with no additional expenditures.

"We're no longer dealing with if the train comes, it's when," Pratt said.

Republican to challenge Bradley

bring to the table in a legislature dominated by lawyers.

He wants to help position the region to benefit from the biotechnology and nano-technology (tiny microcomputer chips) industries, which are the wave of the future. Palmer says somehow the South Shore didn't attract high-tech companies during the last boom period and the area can't afford to let the prosperity that clean industry can deliver slip through its fingers again.

"New England is at the forefront of those industries," Palmer said. "We really missed out to the metro-west and North Shore during the boom in information technology."

Attracting more industry to the South Shore would also add to the quality of life by providing jobs nearer to where people live — something that could have an indirect impact on schools.

"If you put in three hours a day commuting, you have no time," he says, adding more time for parental participation in the school system can add up to better schools overall.

Palmer favors more local control and thinks Chapter 40B, the state affordable housing law, is a great example why the state should stay out of local affairs. Under 40B, developers can skirt local regulations by including a percentage of affordable housing in a project if a town has less than 10 percent of its housing stock deemed affordable by state standards.

"It's an arbitrary means defined on the state level that makes no sense," he says about how the state determines a town's vulnerability to the law.

Palmer, who is married with no children, says Beacon Hill does not have its finger on the pulse of the emerging economy.

He describes the Legislature as a reactive body, not a body that invests in the future.

Palmer expects to launch a formidable campaign against Bradley, who is a seasoned campaigner and can raise a lot of money.

"Fundraising is one of the key components to being able to win," he says. Palmer says he's been encouraged by the amount of support and the number of calls he's received since he filed his nomination papers about a month ago.

"That's really got me excited about the campaign," he says.

Bradley says he welcomes the competition.

"Campaigns are great because they open up the process and allow different views to be discussed," he says.

And Bradley should know. In his first try for the Third Plymouth seat he faced a primary challenge from Democrats Josh Cutler and Walter Murray, both of Hull. He won the primary but lost to Mary Jeanette Murray in the state election. Two years ago, Bradley faced off against Democrat Michael Holden of Hingham in the primary, and then ran against Republican Mary Anne McKenna and Walter Murray, who ran as an unenrolled candidate, in the general election.

"Right now, I'm focused on the budget," Bradley says. "But down the road I look forward to seeing his (Palmer's) stance on the issues.

"In the meantime, I'm working hard for the district and standing up for what I believe in," he says.

Sailing into the new season with wine tasting, art auction

Club hosts kickoff fundraiser

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Sailing Club is gearing up for the 2002 season. Joining the fleet this year are two new 420s, which are large sailing boats that can be used by beginners all the way up to Olympic athletes.

Because of the purchase of the boats, and various maritime maintenance including buying a trailer and a trailer hitch, the clug will hold a fundraiser this Saturday, May 11 from 7-11 p.m.

The event, dubbed "Art for Sail," will feature local artists' work from oil and water color paintings to wood carvings and photographs. All of the pieces will be available for auction, although some will be in a live auction and others, a silent one.

Karen Oronte, a member of the sailing club, said the event will provide more than just exquisite art.

Along with the various art pieces, which are expected to number in the 40s, the club will provide those who come with elaborate hors d'oeuvres. There will also be a "sail around the world" wine tasting which will feature wines from Australia, Spain, France and Africa.

The wine tasting is being billed as an educational event and representatives from Curtis Liquors will be on hand to discuss the various vineyards.

"This is not just an art auction," Oronte said. "This is going to be a really fun event."

Commodore Bob Deutsch said people will be impressed with the quality of artwork displayed this weekend.

"We are going to have notable maritime artists from all over the South Shore," he said. "There will be a lot of beautiful pieces available to purchase."

Deutsch said the sailing club will really appreciate the money raised at the event.

"This is an important time for the club," he said. "We're trying to make the club the best it has ever been."

> "This event is going to be pleasing to the stomach and the eyes."
> — Karen Oronte, Cohasset Sailing Club

Deutsch went on to say that the two 420s the club recently bought are top-of-the-line boats. He said children that take up sailing at the club will be learning on some of the best boats out there. One of the unique features of the 420s is, it can convert from a one "sail" boat, to one with two or three sails.

"People can really progress in their abilities on this one boat," Deutsch said. "It's not only considered the best training boat there is, but it's used in the Olympics as well."

Capacity is limited in the event because of the restraints on the number of people that can fit in the Lightkeepers' Residence. Invitations were sent to the more than 200 members of the club.

"I'm really looking forward to seeing a lot of the members get together," Oronte said. "It should be a special night."

Oronte, who has been in the club since it first started in 1964, said some of her most wonderful childhood memories involve the sailing club. She wants the club to continue to provide future generations of Cohasset youths the opportunity to explore an interest in sailing.

"It's a wonderful institution of this town," she said. "We live in a coastal community and it's important to learn how to sail, it's never too late."

Oronte added part of what makes the club so exciting is its teachers.

"We really have top-notch instructors, who take sailing very seriously," she said. "One could learn pretty much everything there is to know about the hobby and the sport from them."

Deutsch said anyone who is a Cohasset resident can join the Cohasset Sailing Club. The yearly membership rate is about $135, and all applicants have to do is pass a swimming test.

Mystery night at Buttonwood is May 15

Buttonwood Books is delighted to presents its spring Mystery Night on Wednesday, May 15 from 7-9 p.m. in Cohasset.

Questions from the audience during mystery nights often focus on the process of finding an agent and getting a book published. With that in mind, mystery night will include two mystery authors and the publisher responsible for their success.

Ann Perrott of The Larcom Press, which specializes in New England writers, will appear with two of Larcom's Mystery Series authors, Jan Brogan and Leslie Wheeler. Brogan has used her experience as a financial journalist and as a staff writer for several major newspapers to write "Final Copy", a story about an investigative reporter at a Boston newspaper. Wheeler has written, "Murder at Plimoth Plantation". Her protagonist is aunt to an interpreter at the plantation who becomes implicated in the murder of the man who portrays Myles Standish.

Local authors, local settings and local publisher all add up to an evening to put on the calendar. Free Event time next year. The recent cut was the first time her mother wasn't the one cutting her hair, but she said the salon did a good job.

Girl cuts her hair for a cause

"They weren't as good as my mom but it still looks good," Brooke said.

Cummings said she is so proud of her daughter. She said she's always been very compassionate and likes to do a lot for others.

"She's really incredible," Cummings said. "This was all her initiative, it was a wonderful thing for her to do."

Locks of Love has some hair donation guidelines. The charity accepts a 10-inch minimum hair length and doesn't take wigs or synthetic hair. The hair must be bundled in a pony tail or braid and needs to be clean, dry, and placed in a plastic bag.

It may be colored or permed, but cannot be chemically damaged (if one is unsure it's recommended to ask a stylist), and hair swept off of the floor is unusable.

Brooke Cummings

Hair that is short, gray, or unsuitable for children is separated from the ponytails and sold at fair market value to offset the cost of manufacturing, but the majority of hair donated comes from children so that is usually not a problem.

Shady bench to be installed

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Sinforosa McGlynn of Elm Street has lived in Cohasset for two years and said she loves the village and the people in the town. She said she used to walk to the harbor to read her newspaper planning on sitting down and enjoying the beauty of the water, but could never find a bench that wasn't in the sun.

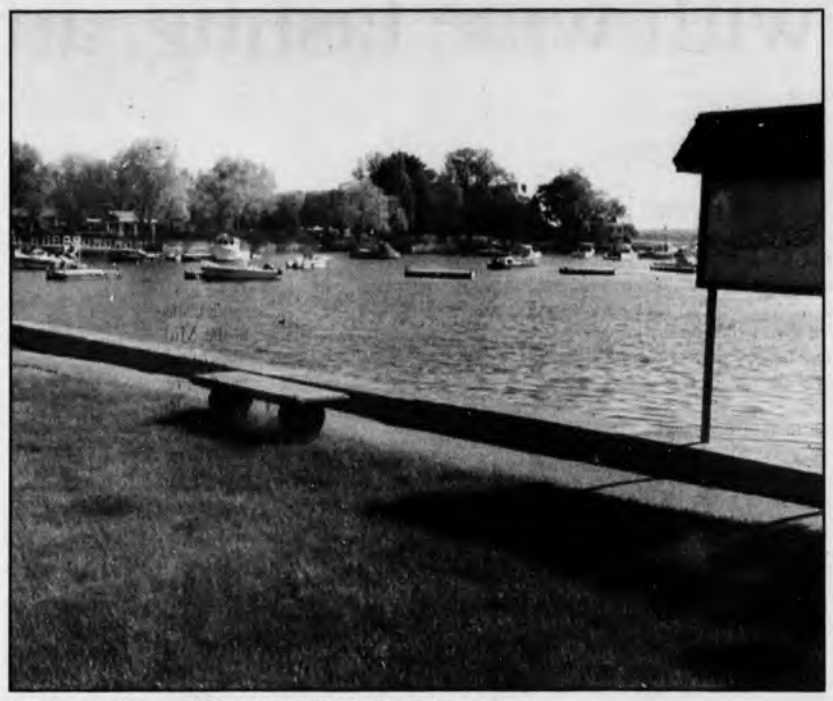
But now McGlynn may get her wish. Town Manager Mark Haddad said he spoke with the Department of Public Works and there will be a bench installed in the area shortly.

In a letter to Haddad, McGlynn sketched the pavilion at the harbor detailing a space where a bench could be placed in the shade allowing residents to get out of the sun. She said a bench placed toward the front of the pavilion would not interfere with those trying to read the map on the back wall.

She wrote the two, eight-foot long benches at the harbor are in full sun. "I've never seen anyone sitting there, the bench in the shade wouldn't even have to be that long," she stated.

McGlynn said it's a shame to waste one of Cohasset's most scenic spots by not having a bench that allows one to get out of the sweltering sun.

"On my walks around the village, I notice practically all the benches are in the sun," she wrote.



Benches like this one at the harbor provide no shelter from the sun.

Cohasset's Daniel Littauer is a DAR good citizen

On Sunday, April 21, the Col Thomas Lothrop/Old Colony Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution honored recipients of the DAR Good Citizen Award. Sponsored through the chapter, the winners recognized were Daniel Littauer of Cohasset High School, Alyse Struzziery of Hull High School, Rebecca Curran of Weymouth High School, and Christina Blosz of Whitman-Hanson High School. Unable to attend, but also recognized was Jennifer Ann Curran of Rockland High School.

The DAR Good Citizen Award is given annually to members of the senior class of accredited high schools. The students are selected by the faulty and voted on by members of the senior class. They must have the qualities of Dependability, Service, Leadership and Patriotism. The program is recognized by the National Association Secondary School Principals.

Daniel Littauer of Cohasset High School is the son of Thomas and Theresa Littauer. He is a member of the National Honor Society, president of the Student Council and captain of the wrestling team. He is on the All League Wrestling Team, a Pilgrim Conference All-Star and Mariner All-Scholastic wrestler. He has also participated in soccer, crew and chorus. This spring he started a wrestling program for fourth-through-sixth graders though the Recreation Department. In March, he was selected to attend the Presidential Classroom in Washington D.C. For the past two years he has been on biology school trips to Belize and Costa Rica. He traveled to Papua, New Guinea and taught at the government boarding school and did manual labor for missionaries. He also has participated in the Appalachia Service Project and Relay for Life. Plans unveiled for balloon festival at former air base

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

It may have taken five-plus years to get their idea off the ground, but organizers are walking on air now that they have the go-ahead to host a balloon festival this summer at the former South Weymouth Naval Air Station.

The New Jersey based company producing the Tedeschi/Li'l Peach Balloon Festival organized and executed three other such events in the time it took for the Weymouth proposal to work its way through the red tape. But officials couldn't be any happier to have this chance, in the words of executive producer Howard Freeman, to return to a rich tradition of aviation at the defunct base.

"People remember those aviation shows and that is a part of the base," said Freeman. "It's also a great site for an outdoor festival with all that wide open space."

Freeman described the event on Aug. 9 through 11 as a state fair with hot air balloons.

Kenneth Goff, executive director of the South Shore Tri-Town Development Corporation charged with redeveloping the base, sees the event as a good match. That's also good news to assuage critics the board was moving too slowly in developing plans for the base reuse.

"We have cooperated with the festival promoters for some months now because we believe that this is a wonderful opportunity," said Goff. "It's billed as a family event, and I think that the organizers have done a lot to put together a quality family oriented event at the base."

He said the group helped them to get appropriate approvals from the U.S. Navy. "Although these approvals are currently being finalized, things appear to be coming together very nicely and moving in the right direction. We look forward to helping the sponsors with this. It's going to be a very colorful and enjoyable weekend for people in the region."

The family oriented Balloon Festival is "more than just hot air." There will be concerts by K.C. and the Sunshine Band, Hall and Oates, and Grammy nominee Susan Tedeschi, along with performances of Scooby Doo's School Daze and a carnival midway.

Mass balloon ascensions by as many as 75 brightly-colored hot air balloons — some over 13 stories high — will carry their passengers on a magic carpet ride in the mornings and evenings.

The expected attendance at the Festival is 75,000. And there will truly be something for everyone.

Along with Scooby Doo, children will enjoy the Paul Bunyan Lumberjack Show, a petting zoo, kiddie rides and a Ferris wheel, clowns, magicians, and story time.

The Sheraton Braintree Balloon Emporium offers a lesson on the history of ballooning and the chance for children to make their own miniature hot air balloons. Everyone will enjoy the spectacular fireworks display.

The big attraction is, of course, the balloons.

When the "envelope" is almost inflated, the propane burner heats the air in the colorful nylon sphere and the pilot guides the hot air balloon as it gently rises into the sky. Passengers in the aluminum-framed wicker gondola will see the panorama below from a lofty vantage point.

"You go at the speed of the wind. There is no sound. It's like magic. You never know where you are going to go, how far you will go, or where you will land," Freeman said.

Each balloon has a "chase crew," a truck or RV that follows along on the ground. The pilot and chase crew keep in touch by walkie-talkie or cell phone. When the pilot is ready to land, perhaps in the back yard of a house in the cul-de-sac or near the barn with a red door, the chase crew dashes on ahead to ask the landowner's permission.

Upon landing, the passengers and pilot share a glass of champagne with the landowner before stuffing the balloon into the chase truck and heading back.

Champagne has been associated with ballooning since the first flight in America more than 200 years ago when a Frenchman, Jean-Pierre Blanchard, took off from Philadelphia and came down on a New Jersey farm. The farmer, who spoke only German, came after the balloon with a pitchfork. Blanchard, who had brought some champagne with his lunch, saved his balloon from being shredded by offering his host the bottle.

Balloons will soar to new heights during the festival planned at the South Weymouth Naval Air Station, Aug. 9-11.

Hot air balloons usually cruise at 3,500 feet. Many balloon flights occur between 50 feet — skimming over treetops— and 1,000 feet. The world record for altitude in a hot air balloon is 64,997 feet.

The pilot controls the ascent and descent of the balloon by regulating the propane burner and the vents that release the hot air from the top of the balloon.

"There is a saying that your first balloon ride costs $175. The second ride costs $15,000," Freeman said.

The family-oriented Balloon Festival is "more than just hot air."

This refers to a common experience of those who fall in love with ballooning. Once they experience their first ride, they earn a hot air balloon pilot's certificate from the Federal Aviation Administration and buy their own hot air balloon.

In addition to being three days of fun, the Festival is an opportunity for community groups to earn donations. At past balloon festivals in New Jersey, Long Island, and Columbus, local organizations have raised $10 million for charity.

Tickets are available at any of the 215 Tedeschi Food Shop, Li'l Peach or Store 24 locations, or by calling 1-800-99-HOTAIR. Tickets in advance are $11 for adults and $6 for children 4 to 12. At the gate, adult tickets are $15 and children are $10. Children under three are free.

The Festival begins at 1 p.m. on Friday, Aug. 9, continuing until 10 p.m. Festival hours for Saturday, Aug. 10 are 6 a.m. to 10 p.m., and for Sunday, Aug. 11 are 6 a.m. to 8 p.m. Balloon ascensions will be at 6:30 a.m. and 6:30 p.m., when winds are calmest.

The Festival will go on rain or shine. If the weather is not good enough for launching the air balloons, the other activities will still take place. Tickets for the balloon rides are purchased separately.

Visit web site www.balloonfestival.com for more information about ballooning and the Tedeschi/Li'l Peach Balloon Festival, as well as directions to the former South Weymouth Naval Air Station.

Lax squad clips Falmouth in grudge match behind Kahn, Hickey hat tricks

Remembering how Falmouth celebrated its 11-10 win two weeks ago on Alumni Field, the Skippers vowed they would pay the favor back.

After 48 intense minutes, the Cohasset players did just that, as they grabbed an early 8-3 lead, and fended off a determined Clipper comeback for a 10-8 win, the fist victory over their Cape Cod rival in five years.

Getting another great performance in goal from senior Kyle Weber, Cohasset was led by a junior contingent of attackmen Curt Kahn and Matt Davis, and midfielders Robert Hickey and Tom Anderson, who together accounted for eight of the Skippers' 10 goals.

"This was one of the games that had the potential to define our season," said Head Coach Kevin Orcutt. "We needed to at least split with the Clippers to prove

Boys tennis team eyes playoff berth after winning three-of-four

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Somewhere in the shadow of the monstrous success of the girls tennis team, the boys tennis team has managed to pull out a few wins over the past week. In a year where only two of the nine players played for last year's playoff squad, the team is opening some eyes by making a serious bid for this year's post-season.

Things started this spring as expected for team of seven rookies, losing the first three matches of the year to Hingham, Norwell and Mashpee. But the boys has scrapped together wins in four of their last five matches to even their record at 4-4.

The Skippers built some momentum in taking 3-2 decisions over SSL foes Abington and Carver. However, their next match was a season low-light, with the team losing to Norton, who had already lost to both Abington and Carver.

With the Lancer coach scrambling his line-up to try to gain the advantage, he put one of his regular first doubles players, senior captain Justin Eddison, at the number one spot where Cohasset's captain got the team's only point of the day.

The team rebounded early this week though, reversing the fortune it had against Mashpee three weeks ago, with a 3-2 win.

Junior Ross Lieb-Lappen improved to 4-0 as a varsity third singles player with a laugher win, 6-0, 6-0, in under 40 minutes. Sophomore Tim Anton continued his excellent season at second singles for 6-3, 6-2 victory over the hard-hitting junior Nick Johnson.

Mashpee then tied the team match by winning both doubles matches, making it 2-2 with just first singles left. Cohasset's number one took the first set with ease 6-2, then held off a late comeback by Falcon captain Matt Langler for a 7-6 (8-6 tiebreaker) straight sets win.

Cohasset became only the second team behind superpower Norwell to top the 8-2 Falcons this year. Fueled by the win, the Skippers rebounded from last Friday's loss in Norton to take the Lancers 3-2 at home.

The second doubles team of junior

Lady laxers scuttled by Sailors

Cohasset girls fall to 2-5 with back to back losses to Scituate

By David Ingber
CORREPONDENT

In the much anticipated girls lacrosse match-up of playoff hopefuls, Cohasset and Scituate, the visiting Sailors took a thrilling 13-11 last Monday at Cohasset's Alumni Field.

"It was definitely a game that we wanted to have," said veteran Sailor coach Paula Evans after the win.

Senior captain Nicole Evans paced the Lady Sailor attack with four goals, including two consecutively in the final three minutes to seal Cohasset's fate with a 12-10 score. Evans, who has become adept at quarterbacking Scituate's effective passing offense from behind the net, also recorded three assists.

Cohasset opened the game with a 3-1 lead early in the first half behind quick shots by senior captain Kristin Sheerin, sophomore Nicole Turgiss and junior Sera Genovese. Genovese continued her excellent stint since coming off the injured list, scoring a hat trick in this one.

As expected, Sheerin fell under blanket double coverage all-game, yet still managed two goals and two assists.

Down 3-1, Scituate's offense received a jumpstart from junior attacker Lauren Glancy as the Lady Sailors surged to a 5-4 halftime advantage. After the half, Scituate held a clear advantage in ball possession as they opened up a 8-5 lead behind tallies from freshmen Amanda Hardin and Jackie Lapsley.

"We have got to win the ground balls," mentioned first year coach Torin Sweeney of what hurt his team most. "Our transition game was a little better, and we've got the speed, but we just have to win the 50-50 balls."

Cohasset did not go quietly in the second half, with junior Maura McKenney showing the form that has made her the second highest Skipper scorer the last two years. She scored four of her five goals in the second half to keep it interesting.

After junior defenseman Katherine Coyne took a wrap-

Patriot League on ice

MIAA disbands Patriot League hockey after one year

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

The Patriot League has been put on ice, or rather off ice... OK, let's try this again.

The MIAA has agreed to disband the Patriot League for hockey one year after it was created. Subsequently, the Hanover, Scituate, Hingham, Rockland, Duxbury and Middleboro High hockey teams will play the 2002-'03 season as independent teams.

Administrators at these six schools received word on Friday from the MIAA on the decision. An MIAA spokesman added that the situation will be re-visited after next season, with the creation of a new league beign one possibility.

The breakup of the Patriot League seemed inevitable, with coaches for perennial powerhouse teams like Hingham and Duxbury making noise about the league formation well before the first puck dropped this past winter. The heads of both programs did not want to be saddled with two league games apiece against the other four PL teams, which are all several notches below them in terms of talent and numbers. Now, Hignham and Duxbury are free to line up games with elite programs.

"In one respect, I'm happy to be playing an independent schedule," said Sylvia, who directed his Indians to an unbeaten season and a Div. 3 state championship for the 2000-'01 season. "The Patriot League was not a fun league to be in last year. There was Hingham, a Division 1 team. Hanover and Duxbury were Division 2 teams, and schools like Rockland around pass from Sheerin and scored to make it 10-9, McKenney took one in unassisted from midfield 30 seconds later to tie it.

Evans then ended the threat with back-to-back goals. The second of the two was a pretty one-timer where she batted in a perfect pass from behind the net, beating junior goalie Gia Petrakis.

Soon after, Lapsley put an exclamation point on the evening with a tough goal through traffic after Turgiss made a final bid with a penalty shot goal.

"We dropped our marks; there was some confusion as to who was covering who," said Sweeney, a testament to the Lady Sailors' swarming offensive attack.

The Lady Sailors improved to 5-3 with the win, and can conceivably clinch a playoff spot within a week. The Lady Skippers fell to 2-4, but their post-season hopes remain very much alive with more than a few rain make-up games left to be played.

In a rematch at Scituate 24 hours later, the Lady Skippers fell in a defensive struggle, 6-5.

that we deserve to be considered in the upper tier of the Pilgrim Conference. We did that with an excellent offensive performance."

Kahn opened the scoring for Cohasset five minutes in to the game, taking a feed from Hickey to erase a 1-0 Falmouth lead. Hickey and junior attackman Matt Davis added two more in the next four minutes to give the Skippers a 3-1 lead at the end of the first quarter. It was a lead they'd never relinquish.

Falmouth closed to 3-2, but Cohasset then went on a nine-minute 5-0 run to effectively put the contest away. Scoring for the Skippers in this stretch were Kahn (two goals), senior attackman Eric Libby (two goals) and Hickey.

"I can't say enough about Eric Libby, who was fighting a sore back the entire game," said Orcutt. "We got great senior leadership from him and from Weber (17 saves). They'd never beaten Falmouth, and they wanted this badly. I've also got to credit Curt Kahn for stepping up with Paul Previte and Jason Moore both out. He's giving us an all-star level performance this season."

Falmouth closed to 8-4 with less than a minute in the half, but Cohasset — on a hard shot by Hickey off a pass from Kahn — pushed the lead back to five three minutes into the third period. From that point on, the Cohasset defense of senior Chris Caron, juniors Nick Spirito and Ben Lynner, and sophomore longstick midfielders Conor Buick and Mike Devine controlled the high-powered offense of Jason Cleary, Joe Bushy and Colin Raposa.

Cohasset goes to 10-2 on the season, and 5-2 in league play. Falmouth falls to 8-5 on the season.

Cohasset 14, Barnstable 2

The Cohasset boys rolled to their second win in two days, topping Pilgrim rival Barnstable in a non-league 14-2 win at Alumni Field on Wednesday afternoon. The Skippers, coming off a tough Tuesday night victory, started sluggishly and led only 3-0 at the end of the first quarter.

Cohasset shook off the cobwebs midway through the second period, however, and threw in six goals in a six-minute span to ice the game. Junior attackman Curt Kahn – the team's leading point-getter with 36 — had four goals and an assist in just two periods of play, and classmate Tom Anderson, a midfielder, tossed in three goals in the same amount of time. With an 11-0 lead at the half, Coach Kevin Orcutt cleared his bench in the third and fourth quarters, playing everyone in uniform.

"This was a good game for us," said Orcutt, "both because our second quarter was one of the best all season, and because everyone saw action. I was especially impressed with the play of goalie Nick Murphy, attackman Sean Chase, and Matt Davis."

Chase, starting his second game at attack, had a career high two goals and an assist. Soph midfielder Mike Hajjar picked up his first varsity goal, and senior Chris Caron and freshman attackman Jon Grimm both got their first varsity points, assisting on scores. Other Cohasset scorers were senior Eric Libby with a goal and two assists, Matt Davis with a goal and an assist, junior middie John Durkin and freshman Jake Previte with a goal each, and Mike Rasmussen, Pete Whoriskey and Robert Hickey with assists.

Senior goalie Kyle Weber played the first half, shutting out the Red Raiders while collecting five saves. Soph Nick Murphy replaced him and continued the shutout, making three stops and getting solid support from soph defensemen Steve Davis, Conor Buick and Dan Roth. Freshman Chris Simms took the final six minutes in the net, and picked up a pair of saves while allowing both goals in his first varsity action.

"Pretty much everyone has something to feel good about today," said Orcutt. "Evan Pestone put the hit of the day on a Barnstable defenseman, and caused a turnover. Dwayne Morris, JT Oronte, Casey Coleman and Matt Baroudi all did a nice job on clears. Mark Donovan looked dangerous on offense."

FROM THE NEXT LEVEL

Two former C.H.S lax stars making marks

On the girls' side, Lady Skippers 2000 co-captain Jackie Kahn concluded her sophomore year at Centennial Conference member Swarthmore College on a scoring tear. In the Garnet's final seven games, attack wing Kahn scored 19 goals. The two-time high school all-star had four goals versus Chestnut Hill, hat tricks against league rivals Haverford and Western Maryland, and non-league Cedar Crest, and two-goal performances against Ursinus, Bryn Mawr and Stevens Tech. In the Stevens Tech contest, Kahn's overtime score gave Swarthmore — which finished its year at 9-6 — the win.

Kahn finished the season with 21 goals and six assists, third best on the team, despite missing four games. In the fall, she also was a standout soccer player, finishing second on that squad in scoring.

On the boys' side, former Skipper 2000 co-captain Kevin DeVito has led Patriot League member Lafayette College to three wins in its past four games. DeVito, taking over as starting goalie for the Division One squad from Easton, Pennsylvania, recorded 20 saves in an 8-4 victory over Holy Cross, and 10 saves while allowing just one goal in a 15-3 rout of Wagner College. The former Skipper had four saves in Lafayette's 10-7 win over Marist. For the season, DeVito is 3-2 as a starter, with a solid .642 save percentage.

Cohasset's Jackie Kahn wrapped up a solid sophomore season on the lacrosse field at Swarthmore College with 19 goals.

MIAA does the right thing

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

Just when you think you've got them pegged, they go and do something like this.

Kudos to the MIAA for trying out a couple of new approaches to managing high school sports in this state. Not only did that august body acknowledge a previous mistake, but it took quick steps to correct it.

How the Patriot League, as put together last winter for hockey, ever came to be in the first place is certainly beyond my ability to reason, but at least the MIAA relented last week in the face of overwhelming evidence and near unanimous opinion to undo its error. Is it possible they finally have someone up there on high who's finally "getting it?"

We can only hope.

The decision to ever pit two teams with legitimate perennial state title hopes, Duxbury and Hingham, in the same league against fledgling programs such as Scituate, Rockland and Middleboro, and even a "small school" powerhouse like Hanover, was, quite simply, ludicrous. None of these teams benefited from this one year marriage.

The Rockland team (1-19) was in so far over its head against Duxbury and Hingham, their players were simply shellshocked. Some might say the Bulldogs younger players never recovered this from the humblings they were forced to endure in the two games each against these powerhouse squads.

The argument that "solid" smaller programs like Scituate and Hanover benefited from playing four games each "above their heads" had a bit more substance, but that too dies on the vine in the final analysis. The Hingham and Duxbury teams gave far from their best in these meetings and everyone knew it. I was at a few of these "games" (I use that term loosely). I saw how Duxbury and Hingham would come out intent on ending it early with a first period flourish. Then they'd settle back into a neutral zone trap and cycle, cycle, cycle, ad nauseum. In a word, it made for lousy hockey.

Stow the assertions that the Scituate and Hanover players gained a step by trying to keep up with the likes of the Duxbury and Hingham skaters. This deviation from the norm of how conventional hockey is played more than offset any individual gains, particularly from a "team game" perspective.

Then, of course, there is the matter of how much these four inevitable losses cost Scituate and Hanover when it came to state tourney seedings.

So what now?

Duxbury, Hingham, Scituate, Hanover, Rockland and Middleboro (which was set to make the jump from JV to varsity competition in the Patriot League this coming winter) will compete as independents in 2002-'03. Duxbury and Hingham will no doubt look to maintain that status for as long as possible (in other words, doing their best to stave off MIAA tampering), while the four smaller schools will likely look to hook up with leagues within the Pilgrim Conference for '03-'04.

Prior to this past season, Rockland, Hanover and Scituate were part of an eight team South Shore League that also included Norwell, Cohasset, Hull, Abington-East Bridgewater and Randolph. That league went to six last winter, with Randolph going independent and Mashpee and Harwich coming on board.

A few present South Shore League coaches might not like the idea of Rockland, Hanover and Scituate rejoining the league, or of Middleboro coming aboard. That has something to do with the fact these four are bigger schools, but probably more to do with the fact these coaches do not want to go to a 10 team league and thereby forfeit a good deal of their non-league scheduling flexibility. With most of the teams playing 20 game schedules, and league rivals generally trading off home-and-home meetings, that would leave coaches with only two open dates.

The all too simple solution would be to create two five team leagues from this group, with Abington-East Bridgewater the logical candidate to join the four bigger schools.

Or, how about this: the creation of a South Shore League- Large and a South Shore League-Small? The teams could then play two games against each of the four other teams within their own division and one each versus the other division's teams. That would give each of the 10 teams 13 "set dates", and approximately seven open dates. No Athletic Director welcomes the prospect of having to fill much more than this number of open dates on a yearly basis.

Such a move would also help assure the perpetuation of some great local rivalries on the ice, such as Abington vs. Rockland, Norwell vs. Hanover and Cohasset vs. Scituate, to name just a few.

and Scituate, much bigger than Hanover, were classified as Division Three teams. Things were a mess."

The MIAA bumped longtime "small school" powerhouse Hanover up a division for last season following the state championship run, despite Sylvia's constant cries about the cyclical nature of high school sports.

"I like playing as an independent, but we will miss playing for a league championship and the kids will miss being named to all-star teams," the veteran Hanover coach continued. "We started out every season with two goals: make the tournament and win the league championship. Now we will have just one goal: making the tournament."

Scituate coach Mike Breen is also happy to be out of the league.

"I would rather play an independent schedule," stated Breen. "There were a couple of teams in the Patriot League that I'm happy to be away from.

"As far as finding opponents, I see no trouble there. I have already had calls from Dennis-Yarmouth, Middleboro and Carver, to mention a few. Then of course, there's Hanover, Rockland, Norwell and others. We will have no trouble scheduling the 20 games. It just makes a little more works for the coaches and athletic directors to put the schedule together."

Coach Sylvia noted that an attempt was made to move Hanover in to the Atlantic Coast League, but ACL officials wanted all or nothing. In other words, the ACL would allow Hanover to play ACL hockey but all the other Hanover sports would also have to play ACL sports.

For a coach like Sylvia, making up a 20-game independent schedule will not be that difficult. He has coached hockey at Hanover for 26 years and he's obviously made a lot of contacts.

"I already have teams in mind that I would like to play next season," said Jim. "We will play Rockland and Scituate each a couple of times. We will participate in the Martha's Vineyard Tournament for a couple of more games. I plan to play at least one game with teams like Whitman-Hanson, Norwell, Abington/East Bridgewwater, Revere and, of course, a couple of games against my brother at Quincy."

Bob Sylvia is the Quincy coach.

"All the MIAA says is that we have to win 50 percent of our scheduled games to qualify for tournament play," continues Hanover's Sylvia. "I think it will work out for all concerned. Hingham and Duxbury will be able to play the type program they have been looking for and we will play teams that are competitive.

"I admire what Hingham has accomplished. They wanted to play higher echelon teams and build a program that would keep kids from running off to play for private schools.

"The move will certainly be welcomed by Hingham. For instance, how would it have looked if a Division Two team like us defeated a Division One team like Hingham in the tourney. As it turned out, we lost 6-4, but if we had won, their chances to play Super Eight teams would have been hurt."

No laughing matter

Scott Faber and Andrew Busk gave Cohasset its first point of the day with a 6-3, 7-5 win. Three of Cohasset's four wins have come from a pivotal point from second doubles.

Sophomore Jessie Brewer got his first singles match win of the season, winning 6-3, then coming back from a 1-5 score to take the second set 7-5.

Anton had the most thrilling win of the day at second singles against Lancer captain Joe Cummings, a remarkably fast and effective net player.

Anton rebounded from a 2-6 loss in the first set to capture the match in three sets.

Cohasset tried to close out the day with a good-measure win at number one against the Lancers' Brazilian Sensation, but Rafael Sanchez held on for a 6-3, 2-6, 7-6 (8-6 tiebreaker) win in a match that lasted just under three hours.

With 8 of their 14 matches completed, including three of the four toughest SSL match-ups (a contest in Norwell today being number four), Cohasset needs only win three more for a ticket to the South Sectional Tournament. Included in the remaining six matches are two teams Cohasset has already beaten, and two more against Harwich, who appears to be the weakest team in the league.

So the team lost half its players to graduation, and two more to other sports, and this year was supposed to serve merely as interim until a strogn cast of current eighth graders moved in next year. But, lo and behold, Cohasset is thinking about tennis beyond the regular season now.

Seven Cohasset tracksters take first place at SSL meet

Cohasset High's Tim Baird, Pete Maitland, Dan Kinchla, Ian Kidder and Liam Martin, Laraine Langford and Jenn Buckley all captured first place finishes in events at this week's South Shore League Track Meet.

On Monday, at Norwell High, Langford won the 100-meter hurdles race with a time of 18.1 seconds and Buckley won the mile (5:36.4)

At the boys meet Tuesday, at Carver High School, seniors Baird and Maitland both set league meet records: Baird in the 800 (1:59:12) and Maitland in the javelin (179-feet-3-inches).

Kinchla won the 2-mile race, Kidder the triple jump and Martin the high jump.

Youth laxers tested in several close games

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse was back in action last weekend as Mother Nature gave us a spectacular Spring day which proved to be the perfect backdrop for what turned out to be some of the best competition of the season with several of the games being decided in the last few seconds of play.

The Cohasset U10 White team had their toughest outing of the year with a dramatic come from behind victory hosting a very strong Plymouth Blue team in what turned out to be the lowest scoring game yet this season for both teams (5-4). Ian Quinlan played the whole game in goal and came up with many saves including a terrific stop with 10 seconds to go to preserve the win.

The teams both missed early scoring opportunities and Cohasset took the lead 2-0 after the first period on goals by Eamon Davis and Chris Walsh. Plymouth played tough defense and it was 2-1 at the half as tough middie play continued to rule the day with stand-out performances by Andrew Cantillon, Jeff Durkin and Andrew Mckenna who clearly helped the defensive group keep pace on a very hot Spring day.

Plymouth found their stride in the 3rd quarter but with excellent play from Quinlan and the defense of Taylor McQuade,Terrance Durkin and Andrew Littauer, Cohasset kept it close and kept the score to 3-2 in favor of Plymouth. The 4th quarter saw Cohasset tie it up on a goal by Andrew Graham only to fall behind again 4-3 with 5 minutes remaining. Near misses by John Kearney and Geoff Evans had Cohasset behind in the 4th quarter for the first time this year. With 2 minutes left Brendan Doonan made a terrific dodge and goal to tie the score at 4-4. Davis then capped the victory on a breakaway score with 38 seconds left to go for the win.

Next up was the U12 Boys Blue team that also hosted Plymouth at Miliken Field in what ended up being the most exciting game of their season to date. From the first whistle, the home-town crowd knew it was going to be a long day as the Cohasset team showed some cobwebs from a week off as Plymouth dominated all aspects of the game in the first half. If not for the courageous goaltending play of Justin Hollis (16 saves overall) who seemed to be stopping one point-blank shot after another, this game could have easily gotten out of reach very quickly. Keeping it close was also some outstanding individual performances by Alex Shipp with two first half goals, and solo "bangers" by Mike Grimm, Logan Chase, and Chris Rose on a beautiful give and go coming from behind the net. Also, while some of his teammates were "sleep walking", the energetic play of first year midfielder Pat Doonan (who was "everywhere" on the field) kept Plymouth on their toes, but they still pulled ahead 7-5 at the mid-way point.

This was the only "wake-up" call that Cohasset would need as a different team took the field in the second half. During a hard fought, and very physical 3rd quarter that was punctuated by superb offensive and defensive play on both sides, Plymouth and Cohasset traded goals and ended the period with Plymouth still holding the lead at 10-8. Mike Grimm had 2 goals – both assisted down in front, one by Chris Mills and another on a great no-look feed from Teddy Galligan. Chris Rose also notched his second of the game to keep the contest within reach, but the "real fun" was just about to start.

Plymouth opened the 4th quarter with a goal that put them up by 3, but it was clear that Cohasset now had their game faces on and weren't going to be denied. Chris Mills started the come-back on a picture-perfect score off of a feed from Sam DeGiacomo that was set up by dominating face-off play by Matt Burgess. Plymouth added one more score, but it would be their last as the close-in defense led by Mike Bilodeau, Anderson Lynner, and Chris Kuppens stifled the Plymouth offense and refused to let them get any momentum. Chris Rose got his third of the day on an unassisted shot off of a fast break, and then during a flurry of shots on the Plymouth cage that produced a frenzied "man-ball" exercise, Sam DeGiacomo made a remarkable "scoop and fire" to close the gap to within one with two minutes left to play. On the ensuing face-off, Matt Burgess again came up with the ball and produced an immediate fast break that set up a fan-rousing goal by Alex Shipp to complete his hat trick and tie the score. With fresh legs in the game, Logan Chase muscled around the Plymouth midfielder to win the next face-off and quickly got the ball to a cutting Mike Grimm. Grimm, who at first seemed to be settling the ball, then burst across the middle, dodged what seemed like the entire Plymouth defense - and with a laser-like strike, caught the goaltender "looking", as he "puffed" the back of the net for the game-winner. Cohasset 13, Plymouth 12.

The last home game of the day was again against Plymouth at the U14 level. After a closely contested first half the Cohasset team easily pulled away and beat Plymouth 14-3. Cohasset started out quickly by building a lead of 4-1 in the first quarter and led 6-3 at halftime with goals coming from Corey Chase (2), Aidan Buick, Dan Trendowicz, Mike Pecca and Austen Lanzillotti.

The close defense was excellent for the entire game led by goalie Ben Libby and defenseman Mike Barnes, Jeff Brown, Jared Dick and Bobby Meikleham. The only negative for the game was a large number of penalties by Cohasset, but that was countered by the outstanding man down defense of Jared Kinch, Trevor Brady and Ryan Kucinski. The man down unit scored three times with Kinch (2) and Kucinski both scoring goals playing as long-stick (defensive) midfield positions. Brady was a force on ground balls and carrying the ball into the offensive zone in his first game of the season after returning from an earlier injury.

Cohasset had several players change positions in the second half and both Adam Smith and Corbin Faber picked up their first goals of the season. Pecca, Trendowicz, and Lanzillotti scored their second goals of the day to round out the goal scoring. Mike Bunstein, Zack Etkind, Chase, Lanzillotti and Buick each had one assist on the day.

The U10 Cohasset Blue squad traveled to Plymouth and faced their strongest opponent yet this season. After a week off both teams went into the game with undefeated records. At the first face off Plymouth worked a fast break into a solid offensive play for a quick first goal. Chris Brown was in the crease for the first half and cleared the ball to his defense and midfielders successfully to keep the strong Plymouth offense at the midfield. Later in the 1st period, Max Shipp tied the score with a text book shot on an assist by Jack Murphy. Shipp then quickly capitalized on a fast break and went one-on-one for another goal to put Cohasset 2 - 1. Plymouth responded just as quickly with two additional goals to end the 1st , 3 - 2.

Due to strong close-in defensive play by Cohasset, Plymouth was forced to shoot from outside with poor results, however, they finally tallied one and went up by one. Max Shipp then tallied another goal on an assist by Dean Driscoll. Will Wise followed up with a well-executed shot after a strong move to the cage. Repeated saves at the edge of the goal and the entire defense held up well during an energy packed first half which ended tied 4 to 4.

The third quarter was a stand-off. The midfield shinned in this quarter. Justin Yeager, Jake Wheelright were both strong on ground balls and Mark Saraikas, Johnny McGoldrick and Sam Leahy were successful at gaining possession and advancing the ball across the midfield. Jack Murphy as goalie made a great save at his knees (hockey style!) and controlled his defense to keep Plymouth scoreless in the third.

The forth quarter would turn out to be the deciding period. Early into the quarter Plymouth scored during a penalty and man-down situation. With two minutes to play the Cohasset squad worked hard to advance the ball to their attack and two shots were made yet saved by the Plymouth goalie. With just over a minute left another shot by Dean Driscoll barely missed with the sidelines thinking we had tied it up. With 7 seconds in the game, Justin Yeager took the ball at the sideline and fed it into the crease but Cohasset was denied and the game ended with a final score of Plymouth 5, Cohasset Blue 4.

The U12 Boys White team also was away with a trip to Marshfield. Expectations were for a tough competitive game against this Marshfield squad, and the forecasters were right. The game was full of high energy and physical play that produced some of the best action of the season. Cohasset notched the first score of the game on a fine unassisted goal by attackman Mark Flibotte. The play was back and forth during the first quarter with Cohasset goalie Wes Ulmer keeping Marshfield off the scoreboard. The second quarter saw the continuation of a physically challenging game with both teams providing solid team defense. Marshfield evened the game at 1, but Cohasset pulled ahead on a magnificent spin move by Peter Oswald and a heads up goal from Charlie Czerkawski in front of the Marshfield cage as Cohasset ended the first half up 3-1.

The third quarter was a testament to Cohasset's desire to continue their winning ways. Despite a physical Marshfield defense, the hometown team stretched its lead on goals from Peter Ernst and Mark Flibotte (for his second of the day), and two more from Peter Oswald with Sean Silvia adding a nice assist as well as several fast breaks. The third quarter ended with Cohasset up 7-1 and the game was now well in hand. The fourth quarter saw Cohasset play solid team defense keeping Marshfield at bay and Oswald finished the scoring with his fourth of the day, making the final an 8-1 victory.

Key to this win was an impressive defensive effort, led by the close-in defense of Kyle Pinkus who in addition to frustrating a very aggressive Marshfield attack group, also had several end to end charges that set up key scoring opportunities. Mike Kusek, James Reichardt, Johnny Wade, David Crawford, and Frank Wheelwright also added to an "iron wall" in front of net making sure that this one stayed in the win column. Wes Ulmer was rock solid in the cage, ending the day with eight saves.

Girls Report

The Girls teams traveled to Scituate where they played two close, down-to-the-wire games, finishing with a tie and a loss.

At the U12 level, Cohasset trailed by one at the half, with the only score coming early off the stick of Gabriella Flibotte. Flibotte tied the game midway through the second half, before Scituate scored again. Finally, Paige Strecker converted a free position opportunity to tie the score. Cohasset controlled the game from there out, but was unable to convert, and the game ended in a 3-3 tie.

Rebecca Evans, Maura Regan, Stefi Belz, Caroline McElhinny and Megan Richardson led a tenacious Cohasset defense that never let Scituate get rolling and managed to stymie repeated opportunities. Thomson Jaffe stopped seven shots, including two direct free positions, to backstop the team's effort.

At the U14 level, Cohasset jumped out to an early lead, powered by two goals from Lindsay Durkin — one assisted by Kara Wilcox — plus individual tallies from Kaleigh Swain and Lisa Spirito.

But Scituate slowly worked itself back into the game, tying the score shortly before half. The second half saw Scituate convert most of its scoring chances, while Cohasset just couldn't put points up on the board. Swain's second goal of the game was Cohasset's only second-half marker, as the girls fell by a final score of 8-5.

Haley Haracz, substituting in the Cohasset goal and with less than one full practice of experience as a goalie, stopped 9 Scituate shots, many from close in. Tessa Leahy, Jessica Wheelwright and Colleen Richardson led a spirited Cohasset defensive effort.

The girls take to the field again on Mother's Day against Braintree, and then play again on Monday, May 13 at Norwell, making up for games that were rained out on April 28.

Awards scholarships

The Social Service League of Cohasset celebrated 90 years of service to the South Shore with a gala event at Atlantica on Friday, May 3. Dinner and dancing was enjoyed by all those who attended. It was an opportunity for the League to thank and honor their many supporters and volunteers, both past and present. There was great representation from many segments of the community.

The evening was also an opportunity for many in the community to meet the League's new Administrative Director Donald Ivas, and his wife, and exchange ideas for future projects.

The Margaret F. Loud, RN Scholarship Award for this year was also announced that evening. This year's scholarships were awarded to Anna Roche and Abigail Pease.

Anna, a graduating senior from Notre Dame Academy and a recognized leader with a long list of volunteer interests, will attend Georgetown University in the fall with the intent to pursue her interest in the field of bioethics.

Abby received her undergraduate degree in Molecular Biophysics and Biochemistry from Yale and will pursue her medical degree at Columbia University. Abby also takes time to volunteer for the Manhattan Women and Children's Project which matches tutors with young students who have HIV.

These accomplished and articulate young women have made clear connections between personal interest and public service and the League wishes them well in their future endeavors.

The raffle for a trip for two to Bermuda was won by Linda Wakeman. Bon Voyage to the Wakemans!

Science comes naturally to kids along school trail

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

With the warmer weather seemingly right around the corner, first and third grade students at the Osgood school will get to enjoy all the wonders of spring.

In continuing with past years, a naturalist from the Massachusetts Audubon Society will take the young students on a walk on a trail behind the school to explore everything nature has to offer. The trail was created with the help of a partnership between the PSO and the Cohasset Conservation Trust, a private organization.

The students will be walking the trail next Thursday and Friday.

The trail winds for about a quarter of a mile behind the school leading to a small grove surrounded by birch trees. Bordering a small stream, a platform extends to allow students to reach into the stream to obtain water samples.

For third-grade students, the goal of the program is to work with them to integrate the use of the trail and observation platform with the current curriculum requirements. The students are taken on two seasonal, interpretive and interactive outings and record details of the life cycles of plants and animals along the way. There will be a focus on the identification of native plants and animals, their adaptations, life cycles and how each fits into a wet woodland ecosystem. In effect, students will become scientists and researchers.

"The basic premise is that they will become stewards for nature and open space in their community," said Ellyn Einhorn, education coordinator for the Massachusetts Audubon Society. "Kids often have an opportunity to learn about far off regions but we're providing them with the opportunity to explore their own backyards."

"We're providing them with the opportunity to explore their own backyards."

— Ellyn Einhorn, Massachusetts Audubon Society

For the first-grade students, the purpose is to introduce them to the rocks, minerals, soil, living and non-living organisms found on the trial beside the school. Students will be expected to examine what they find on the trail and compare it to other items. According the Audubon Society, "the students will be engaged in a learning experience and in hands on activities that relate directly to their curriculum."

The program was started a few years back at the old Osgood school and when the building changes locations, some felt it was still necessary to keep up this program.

Sarah Porter, president of the Osgood PSO, said she is glad this practice continued at the current school. However, she said without the help of the conservation trust it may have never gotten off the ground.

"The conservation trust has done some wonderful things for us," she said. "We probably would not have been able to do this without them."

The PSO needed money for the program, some to build the observation platform and a bridge which covers a small stream, and still more to pay the $1000 per year for the naturalist to teach the class.

Treasurer of the conservation trust Dick Avery said this was a natural investment for the group.

"As an organization, one of our goals is to preserve open land in its natural state," Avery said. "This investment works two fold, we're accomplishing that and also succeeding on educating out town's youth on the importance of nature."

Avery said as a kid growing up he often was sent on hikes in the wilderness and feels that has benefited him as an adult.

"We hope to build a bond between these students and nature," he said. "We want them to see nature as not something to conquer but something to appreciate and thoroughly enjoy."

Coffeehouse provides warm setting for music lovers

Next event is May 18

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

The cozy ambience of the Old Ship Coffeehouse off the Square is hard to describe — you have to be there to experience it.

There's good coffee, yes — as well as tea and tasty homemade desserts — but it's the friendliness of those who gather inside the parish house, the subtle lighting and the wide variety of top-knotch musicians and others who perform there which have earned a name for the coffeehouse.

Regulars and newcomers alike feel welcome

One woman's comment captured the coffeehouse atmosphere perfectly: "I come here by myself, but I'm never alone."

The coffeehouse is run by a group of community volunteers from Hingham, Scituate, Weymouth, Hull, and surrounding towns working together to make the event a success.

Sue Krueger of Scituate, who has since moved from the area, started the coffeehouse almost 20 years ago.

"It was a one-woman operation, and she handled all the music for 15 years," said Ted Moskal, coordinator of the booking committee, which was formed to take over where Krueger left off. The committee scouts out new talent.

"The coffeehouse has a nice, informal, pleasant atmosphere," Moskal said.

There are a number of other committees that work hard to ensure the smooth running of the coffeehouse, which is one of a number located in the Greater Boston area.

Fan Leonard, one of the organizers of the coffeehouse, and James Watson, both of Hingham, are among the longest standing members of the group now, but many others have also volunteered their time over the years.

"The coffeehouse offers a chance to present a variety of performers and share music and ideas in a friendly, mellow setting," Watson said.

The popularity of the Hingham coffeehouse has grown over the years.

"We started out as a small group, but now we have to borrow chairs," Leonard said.

The evening starts off with an open mike, where new and up and coming local singers, storytellers, mimes, poets and instrumentalists can offer their best to a supportive, attentive audience.

"New ideas are always welcome," said Watson.

The Rev. Kenneth Read-Brown, minister at Old Ship Church, has played his banjo and dulcimer during open mike, and his wife, Susan, and other family members have joined him onstage in the past, performing unofficially as the "Read-Brown Singers."

The coffeehouse, which has gained in popularity over the years through word of mouth, also offers an opportunity for people to gather together as a community for an evening of fun for all ages at a reasonable price.

Billy Novick and Guy Van Duser perform at a recent Coffeehouse off the Square.

Proceeds benefit the Unitarian Universalist Service Committee, which promotes social justice and human rights wordwide by helping others create long-term solutions to human rights challenges in their own communities as well as raising funds for medical relief.

When the coffeehouse got its start, for instance, the committee's efforts were focused on Central America in response to events occurring in Nicaragua and El Salvador.

The service committee has also been involved with the September 11 relief effort.

"The coffeehouse is special to me because the purpose has remained the same over the years," Leonard said. "It's not just about having fun, but also reaching out and making connections with people in other parts of the world."

Old Ship Church, which is Unitarian Universalist, provides the hall for the coffeehouse. The event was held at First Baptist Church down the street in its earliest years.

The audience at the April coffeehouse was treated to a variety of original tunes performed by local talent during open mike, ranging from "I Love You More Than Pizza and a Little More than the Moon" to a more serious number attempting to make sense of the events of Sept. 11.

The audience sits companionably around tables, with ample time to socialize during breaks, or in chairs set up in front of the stage, offering a close-up view of the performers.

The most recent coffeehouse featured the "Two Man Big Band" of Billy Novick and Guy van Duser, a resident of neighboring Hull, offering innovative, refreshing music combined with unique vocals.

The duo, returning five years after its first coffeehouse performance, wowed the audience with classic jazz numbers from the 1920s, 30s and 40s.

Van Duser is known for his multi-layered guitar playing and Novick for his "intricate but playfully soaring" clarinet.

"They must have lost my card," quipped van Duser, referring to the length of time between coffeehouse performances.

Novick and van Duser have been making music together for 26 years, so it wasn't surprising that the show was sold out before 8 p.m. and that the audience was one of the most enthusiastic in the history of the coffeehouse.

At intermission time, Watson, who introduced the talent, quipped, "You can see why five years was just too long!"

It was a toss-up as to who enjoyed the evening more – the audience or performers, whose energy, warmth, sensitivity, sense of humor and obvious love for music were captivating.

Every note and word was played or sung with feeling. There was the sense that if the duo continued playing all night long, no one would have left.

The audience was amazed by the richness of the full-bodied performance and awed that two such gentlemen were responsible for creating a sound equivalent to a large band or at least a sizable combo.

But then again, the coffeehouse is known for offering unique and captivating performers.

During some parts of the performance, you could hear a pin drop, while at other times, there was some subtle but enthusiastic clapping and foot-tapping going on, with an occasional joke or anecdote thrown in for good measure.

Perhaps one of the biggest hits was the duo's performance of an original number entitled "New Orleans Farewell," a haunting and soulful number.

The feeling was mutual between the performers and those doing the listening.

"The Hingham coffeehouse audience is wonderful and responsive," Novick said.

Past performers and events include Hingham's own New Age songstress Dawna Hammers; David Dodson, "a delightful singer from Maine by way of Texas," providing humorous and provocative insights into everyday life; Central and South American music; "Poetry Slam"; Taproot and MacIsaac and Ross, offering contemporary songs with a traditional flair; folksinger, songwriter, and humorist Scott Alarik; "A Celtic Christmas" with Aine Minoque and friends; an Irish harpist; and Southern Rail performing Gospel music.

The possibilities are endless, as evidenced by the boxes of CDs and tapes the booking committee has on hand.

"We get a lot of them from potential performers, and others contact us over the Internet about sending us promotional packages," Moskal said. "We offer everything from traditional music to bluegrass."

Next year's intended bookings include African music and the presentation of a mixture of poetry and instrumental numbers. Well-known Irish bass singer Aoife Clancy is already booked for Saint Patrick's Day weekend next year.

The Unitarian Universalist Service Committee, which benefits from the coffeehouse proceeds, was founded in 1939 to aid the victims of Nazi terror. The organization has challenged injustice in more than 50 countries on four continents during the past 60 years.

Its programs are designed to empower women, defend children's rights, and support those who are struggling under racial and ethnic oppression.

The coffeehouse is located in the Old Ship Church Parish House, 107 Main St. Admission is $10 at the door, with proceeds benefiting the Unitarian Universalist Service Committee.

Robbie Walsh on banjo and Mark Ryer on guitar will perform at the coffeehouse Saturday, May 18, at 8 p.m. All are welcome to attend. For further information cal (781) 749-1767.

The coffeehouse recently extended its season — which now runs from September through May — due to popular demand.

Open house at farm May 11

An open house will be held at Holly Hill Farm Saturday, May 11, from 10 a.m. to noon. The farm is located at 226 Jerusalem Road. The purpose of this gathering is to introduce local students and their parents to the farm's Summer Farm Program — summer work experience for young people entering grades seven, eight and nine. At the open house, farm staff will present information about the Summer Farm Program, answer questions and lead a brief walking tour of the farm's fields, greenhouse and barnyard. Application forms for the Summer Farm Program will also be available.

Holly Hill Farm's summer program is an opportunity for young people to spend time on a working organic farm. Sessions are one week long, Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. to noon. Three session will be offered in July, beginning the week of Monday, July 8. During their week at the farm, students will explore the farm's fields and forests, get to know the barnyard animals, learn basic organic gardening and farming skills, assist with daily farm tasks such as harvesting vegetables and flowers, weeding and transplanting and contribute their creative energy to special art and building projects. Participants will also receive a small stipend in compensation for their contribution to farm work. Cohasset summer resident wins Olympic events in 1896

By Lou Eaton
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The third volume of the Cohasset Town History is scheduled to become available in June of this year and the Committee responsible for publication has thought to publish a few articles, courtesy of the Cohasset Mariner, about local history to stimulate interest in matters historical even though not related to the period of 1950 to 2000 covered by Volume III.

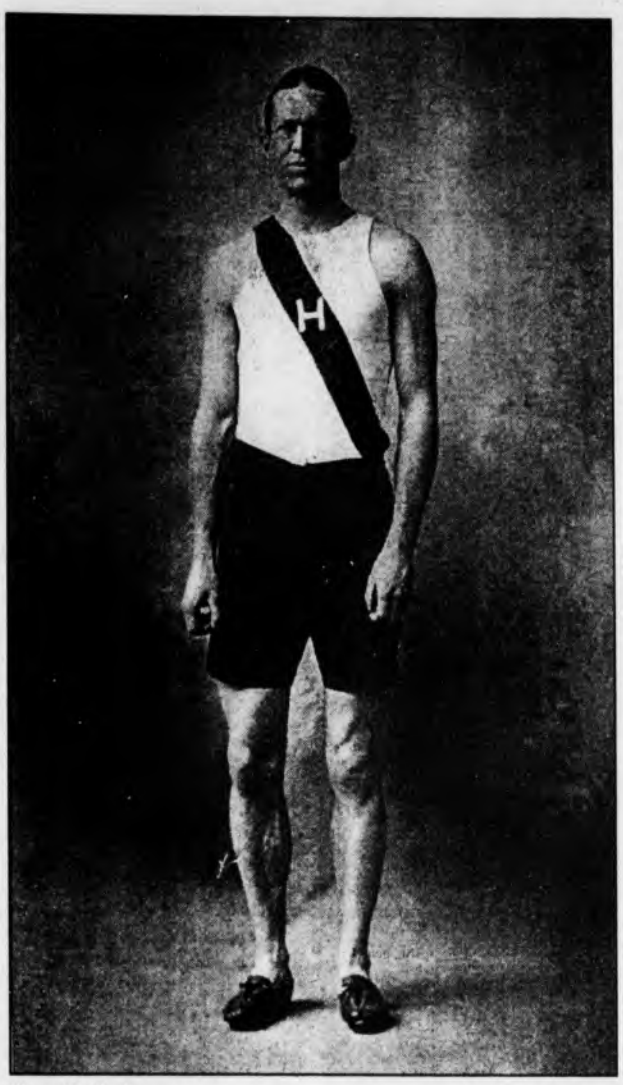
About 20 years ago, I was enjoying a trip to Greece and was in the small hot dusty village of Olympia in the Peloponnese where the ancient Greeks held the original Olympic Games every four years for hundreds of years BC.

In the little village, not far from the restored ruins of the ancient stadium, the magnificent ruins of a temple to Jupiter and the shaded ruins of an ancient village, there is a small museum - as I recall it, two rooms. The walls of one room were composed of old black and white photographs about six feet by six feet of athletes running and jumping. A closer look revealed these were pictures of winners at the first modern revival of the ancient Olympics which was held in Athens in 1896. Another closer look astonished me. One of the graceful jumping winners was Ellery H. Clark! And I knew Ellery H. Clark Jr. This must be a picture of his father.

On my return home to Cohasset, I checked. it out and sure enough that's who it was. It's a fascinating story, because of the recent death of Ellery Clark Jr. and the recent news of the Winter Olympics with all the emphasis on American winners, and also the fact that Ellery H. Clark was a summer resident of Cohasset, bears retelling.

The modern revival of the Olympics scheduled for 1896 in Athens aroused little interest in the United States. They were to be made up of field and track events, gymnastics, bicycling events, swimming and two pistol shooting events. There were no national teams. The Boston Athletic Association decided to sponsor a team. The track and field events were all individual competitions to be contested at 100 meters 400 meters, 800 meters, 1500 meters plus the broad jump, the high jump, the pole vault, the discus throw, the shot put, the 110 meter high hurdles, the hop, step and jump, and the marathon (men, only, of course, amateurs, only of course).

Ellery H. Clark, who was a senior at Harvard College, and was an exceptional athlete, got permission of the Dean with considerable delay and difficulty to take a leave from college and go and to participate in the broad jump and the high jump. He was joined under BAA sponsorship by W.W. Hoyt Harvard '97, a pole vaulter, who had to withdraw from college to go, T. E. Burke, who was eventually Harvard '01 for the 100 meter and the 400 meter runs, Arthur Blake Harvard '93 for the distance runs, T. P. Curtis of Columbia and MIT and the BAA for the 100 meters and for the 110 meter high hurdles, and last but not least a 27-year-old freshman at Harvard from South Boston named James Connelly who was the American National Hop, Step and Jump Champion. He was refused permission from Harvard to go, but quit the college and joined the group on his own account. Princeton University sent a group of four men: Garrett, Tyler, Lane and Jamison, a swimmer.



Ellery H. Clark

In addition, Harvard graduates Sumner Paine '90 and his brother John Paine '91 proceeded independently (Sumner was already in Paris) to participate in the pistol events, arriving on the third day of the five days of the Olympics. John won the first event of the pistol shooting target competition by a wide margin and then did not compete in the second event which his brother Summer won by an equally large score.

On March 21,1896, the BAA team and the Princeton men boarded the steamer "Fulda" in New York and on March 30, they reached Gibraltar where they were able to have their first workout on land. Continuing on the ship to Naples, they took a train to Brindisi, another boat to Patras and then another in to Athens where they were magnificently welcomed and entertained. It was the night before the games began. Someone had forgotten there was 12 days difference between the Greek (Julian) calendar and the Western (Gregorian) calendar; so, no time to practice, rest up, or become acclimated.

The King of Greece, George I, opened the games before a crowd of 60,000 in the Olympic Stadium and the first events were three qualifying heats of the 100 meter dash, which along with the marathon was the biggest event. The classical Olympics, the four year Olympiad between games, was given the name of the winner of the "100" meter dash. The qualifying heats were won by Burke, Curtis and Lane from Princeton. The next event on the first day was the triple jump. No qualifying trials, just, each contestant was allowed three triple jump opportunities to determine the winner. Connelly chanced to be the last contestant. He walked out to the landing area sand pit and tossed his cap on the ground, a good yard past the previous best jump. Then, returning to the takeoff area he ran and hopped, and hopped and jumped well beyond his cap and almost six feet beyond his nearest competitor. He was the first winner at the Modern revived Olympic games.

Princeton's Garrett won the discus, which the Greeks had been expected to dominate. On the second day, Burke won the 400, Garrett won the shot put, Blake took second to an Australian in the 1500 and Ellery H. Clark won the broad jump on his third try after fouling the first two attempts.

On Friday, Burke won the prestigious 100 meters. Curtis who dropped out of the 100 meter final to save himself for the hurdles, won the 110 meter high hurdles. Ellery Clark won the high jump with Garrett second and Connolly third. Hoyt won the pole vault. Fittingly enough, and to wild applause, Greek runners won the first three places in the marathon, which had started at Marathon.

So in all, the small American contingent had won nine of the 12 silver medals in Track and Field Events. Two each for Burke, Clark and Garrett plus the two Pistol medals won by the Paine brothers. The winner's medals were all silver, not gold, because the Greeks thought gold was "vulgar and ostentatious," only second place medals, no thirds. But if you won two, you were awarded a silver cup. And Burke got an olive branch from the sacred groves at Olympia for winning the 100 meters as well as assuring that the Olympiad from 1896 to 1900 would be known as be Olympiad of Thomas E. Burke of Boston.

The Americans were feted by the Royal Family, by Madam Schliemann, the widow of the excavator of ancient Troy, and Admiral Selfridge in command of the American heavy cruiser San Francisco, visiting at the Piraeus to honor the Olympics. Even more so when they got back to Boston "The railroad station was thronged with a surging crowd. There were banquets at the BAA and under the auspices of the city, in the presence of the governor and the mayor, a public reception in old Faneuil Hall."

Clark gives the whole fascinating tale only a short chapter is his book entitled "Reminiscences of an Athlete, 20 years on Track and Field" which he published in 1911. He seems prouder of his achievements in being All-around Athletic Champion of America 1897 and 1903 and All-around Champion of New England in 1896, 1897, 1909, and 1910. (He had suffered an injury, which ended his track career for five years). However, he does say, "Other Olympic games held later were to attract greater numbers of athletes, were to result in the making of more remarkable record, but for the TIME itself, nothing could equal this first revival." And that's the way it looked in the little museum in Olympia, Greece.

High on Gallups Hill, the Gianquittos Victorian home built in 1996 overlooks Hingham Bay.

Victorian with a view

Hull home captures bygone era on the bay

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

The charming warmth of the Victorian era graces a recently constructed Hull home overlooking Hingham Bay.

A wraparound mahogany porch makes the most of the panoramic waterscape — a sparkling expanse of dark blue that is a backdrop for Spinnaker Island and, in the distance, Minot Light.

"We wanted to take advantage of the view more than anything," said builder Jim Gianquitto, who, with his wife Maria, designed their dream house.

With the exception of the custom-designed kitchen looking out on terraced vegetable and flower gardens, each of the eight rooms has a water view. An elegant Celtic wall creates a front lawn on the gently sloping lot.

"We wanted to take advantage of the view more than anything. There isn't a window where you can't see the water."
Builder Jim Gianquitto

On paper, Gianquitto centered the home on the hillside lot three times to take the most advantage of the spectacular view from Gallups Hill.

"There isn't a window where you can't see the water," Gianquitto said.

The attention to detail the Gianquittos exercised when designing their home is representative of many homeowners in the historic neighborhoods dotting the South Shore.

Built in 1996, the gray and white turreted home was created by the Gianquittos with an eye to authenticity.

Because Hull Village is steeped in history, the Gianquittos built their home under the guidelines of the town's eight-year-old Historic District Commission.

"The design is a compilation of a mixture of plans and ideas from our research on Victorian homes, adding on our own touches," Gianquitto said.

One modern convenience is the heated driveway bordered by landscaping.

With a corner turret, veranda and steeply angled roof, the stately Gianquitto home displays many of the key elements of traditional styling that retain the historic charm of Hull Village, according to Don Ritz, chairman of the Hull Village Historic District Commission.

"Traditional Victorian detail enhance the house, the street and the whole town. Everything fits together to be historically attractive, a common thread creating a good streetscape," Ritz said.

The Commission is concerned mostly about exterior appearance of a home, but the Gianquittos chose to carry the Victorian theme throughout.

An antique marble fireplace from a Boston brownstone graces the living room with gleaming hardwood floors with mahogany trim. An adjoining room boasts built-in corner hutches in the style of the period. Stenciled borders painted by Maria Gianquitto add a touch of tasteful elegance.

An unequalled view of the harbor shines beyond the expanse of windows in both the living room and the dinning room, which looks directly out on Spinnaker Island..

The custom natural maple cabinetry add elegance to the tile floor in the culinary area.

Upstairs are three spacious bedrooms, each with its own private bath. A cozy sitting area in the master bedroom, with a sun-dazzling view of the protected harbor, is a favorite napping spot for Bailey, the family cat.

STAFF PHOTOS/TOM GORMAN

Spinnaker Island is in direct view of the home's living and dining rooms.

There is a warm family story about how the Gianquittos' two daughters chose their rooms. Lisa, now married and an advertising executive living in Connecticut, is older than Tina, who is now a professor at Vassar. As a child, getting into the family car one day, Lisa made an announcement to Tina.

"I hosey the front seat for life," Lisa said.

Years later, moving into their new home, Tina had an announcement of her own.

"The first thing Tina did was claim the front bedroom," Gianquitto said.

Historic District Commission Chairman Ritz, an architect specializing in historic construction, and additions, was a member of the study commission in the late 1980s that lead to the establishment of the Hull Village Historic District. He has been chairman of the Historic District Committee since it was established in 1994.

"We encourage people to, respect the history and character of the village. We tell people to respect as much as possible the massing (shape), scale (relative size and proportion) and detail of the traditional. We don't try to specify certain styles," Ritz said.

The role of the Commission is to retain the character of Hull, which Ritz describes as a little Cape Cod. Hull, one of the first summer resorts in the area, is located on a peninsula bordered by the Atlantic Ocean on one side and Boston Harbor on the other.

"You have to have a certain level of review and reg-

Fit to garden

Six simple stretches to ward off soreness

By Rebecca Hecox and Jennifer Raby
SPECIAL TO LIVING

Itching to get out in the garden like the rest of us? Can't wait to get out the door with shovels, pots and get into the dirt?

Or, are you dreading the thought of bending over, and dragging the equipment because you remember how sore you were last spring.

Healthy Living

This year, imagine digging in the dirt, carrying your soil and tools, and feeling healthy and strong all the while. And the best part, not being sore the next day! This year treat yourself well, follow the simple steps below two to three days a week or whenever you're in your garden, and not only will you get fit to garden, but you'll feel stretched and strengthened all season long.

Remember, before you start any exercise program you should consult your health practitioner.

Equipment needed: basic gardening tools, a large shovel, wheelbarrow, bags of potting soil or mulch and a yearning to get outside and make things happen. Gardening muscles worked: legs, upper back, shoulders, biceps, triceps and abdominal.

The program:

1. Warm up: No, that does mean sitting inside looking at the seed catalogs. Get outside and walk around your back 40, get your heart rate up. Look over all of the sleepy winterized flowerbeds and imagine what you will fill them with. This should take about five to 10 minutes.

2. Shovel stretch: Come back to your garden tools you have assembled, pick up the long handled shovel or rake in both hands, slowly press it up to the sky, exhale, slowly lower it to the ground, inhale. Bend your knees slightly, allow your body to feel a slight stretch in your low back, hamstrings (backside of your thighs) shoulders and calf muscles, repeat 3 times.

3. Shovel stretch part two: Take the shovel and dig it solidly into the ground beside you, with one arm holding the handle, reach the other arm over your head to try to touch the top of the handle, exhale and hold 10 seconds or spell F-o-r-s-y-t-h-i-a. Repeat three times and change sides.

4. Shovel stretch part three: Steady yourself using both hands on the shovel handle, place one leg in back and one foot near the shovel. Keeping the back leg straight and the foot flat, lunge forward by bending the front knee. Feel a stretch in your back calf muscle and hold for 20 seconds. Repeat this stretch three times on each leg.

5. Triceps stretch: While standing, reach one arm overhead and then try to pat yourself on your back. Now place the other hand on that elbow that is up in the air, and gently pull back and down. Hold for 20 seconds for three repetitions on each side.

6. Bicep and upper chest stretch: Stand and try to grab your hands behind you with palms facing out. If you are tight from hunching over all the seed catalogs, you may try holding onto the side of your pant legs to aid in your stretch. While you are securing your arms, lift your chest and bring your chin down and in. Hold this position for 10 to 20 seconds release and repeat three times.

Bonus muscle building exercises: Gardeners, tend to do a lot of bending and stooping. Unfortunately, we sometimes forget to use our powerful leg muscles to lift and carry, as well as our abdominal muscles which give power and strength to our movements and protect our lower back. Maintaining a strong upper body is equally important in helping to prevent repetitive movement pattern injuries from digging or raking. The following exercises can help.

Lower Body-Wheelbarrow Squats: Muscles worked— the quadriceps (front of the thigh) and the hamstrings (back of the thigh)

Using the wheelbarrow, stand in front of the handles. Now instead of bending forward to reach the handles, tighten your tummy and keep your chest high and pretend you are sitting in a chair right behind you to reach the handles. Maintain chest upright, grasp the handles push up through your legs to stand up. A few loads of moving bedding plants and compost in this manner will get those thighs working. When you perform this exercise with good form, you also work the abdominals and gluteal muscles, both important in maintaining a healthy back.

Upper Body-Garden Tool Curls, Raises, and Presses: Muscles worked — biceps and shoulders.

Get some two to five pound hand tools for resistance. Standing with your feet shoulder width apart, tools in each hand, slowly bend at the elbow for a bicep curl. Repeat for 10 to 30 repetitions. Now place your arms straight at your sides, palms toward you, raise your arms to the side, about shoulder height and lower. Now raise them forward about shoulder height. Repeat 10 to 30 times. All the while with chest up, and chin down and in. Always remember to breathe normally with every exercise.

These six simple stretches and a few basic gardening exercises should help get you limber and keep you strong- good luck and healthy spring!

Oven baked risotto

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Risotto, the Italian stovetop dish usually made with Arborio rice, is endlessly adaptable but requires a fair amount of hands-on attention. In the past, I have managed to make this dish simpler through preheated stock and higher heat cooking but a recipe in Donna Hay's "Off The Shelf"(I highly recommend her book) caught my attention. It promised baked risotto, an approach that would vastly reduce the preparation time and make it approachable for weeknight cookery.

The recipe included chicken, lemon, leeks, and peas and required 40 minutes of baking in a 400 degree oven. Unfortunately, the rice was soggy and overcooked and the chicken was bland. The first step was to improve the chicken. I substituted skinless, bone-in chicken thighs for the skinless, boneless cutlets, seasoned them well, and then sautéed them in a butter/olive oil combination. The meat was moister and the flavor was better. Next, I dumped the leeks for either shallots or onions to boost the flavor.

For the rice, I started with 2 cups of Arborio, the fat, short-grain rice favored in this dish, and changed the liquid/rice ratio to 1 1/2 to 1 from 2 1/2 to 1. This made for less sodden rice. I also sautéed the rice briefly – a common practice in risotto recipes – and also used a combination of white wine, water, and chicken stock. Now the rice had more flavor and was creamier. I also tried using regular long-grain and basmati rice, both of which worked fine, except the dish is less creamy and more like baked chicken and rice than a true risotto.

As for other ingredients, I substituted thin slices of lemon for the lemon zest called for in the original recipe. This provided a real boost of flavor – packing more punch than the subtle perfume of zest. As for other ingredients, asparagus was my vegetable of choice. One and a half cups of tips are added to the pot 10 minutes before the dish is ready. Peas also worked well. Parsley or basil complement the asparagus nicely; mint or basil are best with peas.

I was still confounded by the long oven time. I wanted a quicker Tuesday night dinner recipe. The trick turned out to be bringing the mixture (chicken, onion, liquid, rice, etc.) to a vigorous boil on top of the stove for one minute before placing it into a 350 degree, oven. This jump-started the process and also meant that I could use a more moderate oven temperature (the original recipe calls for 400 degrees) which turned out moister chicken and rice that was just cooked through. Best of all, the baking time was reduced to a reasonable 25 minutes.

Once removed from the oven I added chopped herbs and the dish was ready to serve. If you don't have a 12-inch skillet with a lid, this dish can also be made in a Dutch oven.

OVEN BAKED CHICKEN/ASPARAGUS RISOTTO

You can substitute a regular long-grain white rice for the Arborio. See the variation below.

3 tablespoons olive oil
3 tablespoons unsalted butter
8 bone-in chicken thighs, skin removed
1/2 teaspoon coarse salt plus additional salt for seasoning the chicken
Freshly ground black pepper
4 to 5 medium shallots or one medium yellow onion cut into 1/4-inch dice
2 cups arborio rice
1/3 cup dry white wine or 1/4 cup dry vermouth
1 1/2 cups low sodium or homemade chicken broth
1 1/2 cups water
1 medium lemon cut into 1/4 inch slices, ends discarded and seeds removed
1 1/2 cups asparagus tips cut into one-inch pieces
2 tablespoons chopped fresh parsley or basil

1. Heat the oven to 350 degrees and adjust a rack to the center position. Season the chicken on both sides with salt and pepper. Place a 12-inch skillet (one that has a cover) or a Dutch oven over medium high heat. When hot add 1 1/2 table spoons each olive oil and butter and once the butter has stopped foaming swirl to evenly coat the bottom of the pan. Add the chicken and cook until dark golden brown on both sides, about 8 minutes. If using a Dutch oven you may need to brown the chicken in batches to avoid overcrowding. Remove chicken from pan and set aside.

2. Pour off accumulated fat from skillet or Dutch oven and lower heat to medium. Add remaining olive oil and butter. Once the butter has stopped foaming add the shallots or onion. Sauté until softened and translucent about 2 to 3 minutes for the shallot and 4 to 5 for the onion, stirring frequently. Add the rice and sauté 2 to 3 minutes longer, stirring frequently, or until the rice is well coated with the olive oil/butter and loses its chalky appearance. Add the wine or vermouth and cook, stirring constantly, until the liquid is completely evaporated, about 1 minute.

3. Add the chicken broth, water, lemon slices 1/2 teaspoon salt and freshly ground black pepper to the pot. Press the chicken pieces into the mixture being careful to keep the rice submerged in the liquid. Bring the mixture to a boil and cook for one minute. Cover pan and transfer into hot oven. Cook for 15 minutes. Gently stir in the asparagus and continue to cook, covered, for an additional ten minutes or until the rice is tender and almost all of the liquid is absorbed and the chicken has reached an internal temperature of 165 degrees (or is firm to the touch and juiced run clear). Remove from oven and stir in chopped parsley or basil. Taste for seasoning adding salt and pepper if necessary. Serve immediately.

Serves 4 to 6

FRESH OF FROZEN PEA VARIATION

Substitute fresh or frozen peas for the asparagus. Use freshly chopped mint in place of the basil.

PILAF VARIATION

Substitute basmati or long grain white rice for the arborio. Omit the white wine. Add 1/4-cup orzo along with the rice and increase the chicken broth and water by 1/4 cup each.

Selecting plants for the garden

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

From high in the treetops, the familiar whistles and chirps of a Baltimore Oriole's melodic song fill the cool morning air. Moments later, a brilliant flash of black and orange swoops down from the towering tulip tree to the thorny branches of Japanese quince bushes below as the handsome male oriole cheerfully chatters while sipping nectar from the fiery orange-red blossoms. Nearby, the iridescent blue-green plumage of graceful tree swallows shimmers in the sunlight as they glide across the lawn, occasionally perching on our bluebird nesting boxes, which they have inhabited from time to time to raise their young. Throughout the day, songbirds serenade their mates as spring courtship rituals and nest-building activities get underway for another season.

Dazzling dogwoods (Cornus florida) dot the landscape with their distinctive pink, white or red flower clusters just as their leaves begin to emerge. Native to the eastern half of the U.S., the showiest parts of these flowers are actually four, brightly-colored, notched bracts, not petals, with the true, tiny yellow flowers to be found in the center of the cluster. Spectacular clouds of pink, white and red crabapple trees (Malus spp.) beautify public and private landscapes, their multitudes of reliable yearly blooms to be followed in autumn by ornamental clusters of brightly tinted fruits. Not to be outdone by their neighbors, Kwanzan cherries with their large, double pink blossoms are putting on a sensational display. The month of May is a glorious time of year for our flowering trees and shrubs.

Inspired by the beauty of the spring landscape, homeowners flock to their local nurseries, eager to add flowers, trees and shrubs to their own yards. An experienced gardener will easily negotiate their way to the proper area for their favorite trees, shade-loving perennials or tender annuals. For the beginning gardener, however, the language of gardening may be totally foreign with new terms and an overwhelming amount of information to absorb in one quick visit to the garden center.

As a novice gardener many years ago, differentiating the terms annual, perennial and biennial were a major challenge for me, terms I now take for granted. An annual is a plant that completes its life cycle in one year's time. Biennials take two years to complete their life cycles, often displaying only foliage the first season and flowering, seeding and dying during the second year. Perennials have an extended life span, living for more than two years. Providing proper growing conditions greatly influences the success of any of these plant groups and it should be noted that many biennials like foxgloves and even some hardy annuals such as snapdragons return for many years.

Perhaps the ideal garden is one that incorporates all types of plants. Small ornamental trees and shrubs, bulbs, and perennials provide structure and permanence. Annuals can be used to fill in spaces including voids created by declining bulb foliage or as edging plants to produce ribbons of season-long color. Many visitors to the nursery indicate their desire to have perennials that bloom all summer. Unfortunately, few perennial plants offer this appealing characteristic. One must choose between the extended bloom span of annuals which must be replanted each new growing season and the longevity of perennials which generally provide their diverse blooms for as little as a week up to a month or more. Designing an attractive, successful perennial garden requires spacing and grouping plants along the border to give the illusion of constant bloom all season long.

With so many plants from which to choose, the selection process can be over-whelming. Be sure to analyze your site prior to purchasing your plant material noting the availability of light throughout the day and your particular soil conditions. When selecting perennial plants, priority should be given to the appearance of the foliage since their leaves are likely to be prominent for 6 months or more while the flowers may only be fleeting. Many worthy perennial plants are ignored, especially those which bloom later in the season, because they are not in flower. Consider the flowers a bonus. Look for perennials that produce bronze, gold, variegated or tinted leaves to offer color all season long. Contrast in texture, form and color creates interest; repetition of these design elements helps to draw the eye through the design producing rhythm. A few hours of research and planning will produce a significantly more! attractive design.

Annuals offer continuity of colorful blooms throughout the growing season but most tender annuals must wait to be set outside until all danger of frost has passed during the latter half of May. The majority of annuals require warm soil and air temperatures to flourish and all may be lost should there be a late frost. Patience is a necessity although special plants may be purchased when they are available and nurtured for a few weeks until warmer temperatures prevail. Be sure to cover or bring tender plants indoors should there be any hint of frost in the local weather forecast.

The importance of asking questions and doing your homework cannot be overemphasized, especially when purchasing and planting expensive trees and shrubs. Learn about the culture, care, and mature size of your acquisitions to protect your investment and reap the ultimate reward of a healthy, beautiful landscape.

Victorian charm and breathtaking water views can be found from nearly every room in the Gianquittos Hull home.

Victorian with a view

ulation, but you have to be flexible. We don't want to create a museum. Hull is very much a summer community and still has a lot of that character," Ritz said.

Hull Village was built mainly in the late 1890s and early 1900s, before air conditioning, so the wrap-around home was a popular feature on homes, allowing people to enjoy summer breeze off the water.

"The concept of the open porch is only 150 years old. The piazza was a new thing," Ritz said.

As an architect, Ritz finds himself gladly offering free advice to Hullonians and prospective Hullonians applying to the Historic District Commission for a Certificate of Appropriateness. The Commission is governed under Chapter 40C, Mass. Historic District

"We encourage people to come in as early as possible. We try to convince them to do the best thing. We have regulatory powers to follow through on what they have agreed to. We have had pretty good experiences with people," Ritz said.

"Traditional Victorian details enhance the house, the street and the whole town. Everything fits together to be historically attractive, a common thread creating a good streetscape."

Don Ritz, chairman, Hull Village Historic District Commission.

With 250 properties, Hull Village is one of the top ten historic districts in Plymouth County in terms of size. The district starts at Duck Lane, including Fort Revere, includes all of Spring and Main Streets and Highland Street, over to the bay and all the cross-streets, ending at Z-Chef on Main Street.

The Gianquitto home has just the right balance of authentic detail.

"A lot has to do with the architectural character of the house. People sometimes over-Victorianize with too many fancy things," Ritz said.

The Gianquittos came across the site for their dream home by chance.

"We were driving along and saw the for sale sign," Jim Gianquitto said.

It was pretty much love at first sight.

"My wife had always wanted to live by the water," Gianquitto said.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MAY 8

Planetary action turns around dramatically at 12:22 a.m., when the moon enters fiery Aries. Gear up for a fast-paced day. Mars, the planetary ruler of Aries, opposes Pluto at 6:09 p.m. Stay alert and be extra cautious when driving or operating machinery. People may be irritable, aggressive, agitated. Channel high energy constructively. Tackle jobs that require physical labor and exertion or let off steam by spending extra time with exercise workouts.

THURSDAY, MAY 9

The moon continues to travel in energetic Aries, setting the stage for another hectic day. In addition, Venus opposes Pluto warning against major decisions, purchases or commitments. Finish old business rather than starting anything new. Get back on track with diets and self-improvement programs. Let go of situations that are out of your control. Don't make waves. Keep your mind and hands busy with practical projects. You can be most productive.

FRIDAY, MAY 10

Plan to start new activities before 9:47 a.m., when the Aries moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. The moon enters Taurus at 12:32 p.m. This moon continues to decrease in light until Sunday morning, when the new moon occurs. An alignment of Venus and Mars prompts you to channel your energies into romantic or creative outlets. Do something that brings beauty into your life or the life of another.

SATURDAY, MAY 11

A lunar alignment to Neptune generates a sleepy, laidback mood this morning. Avoid rigid time schedules and ambitious work agendas. This is a weekend to kick back and relax. In addition, Neptune and Mercury are slowing their rate of motion, preparing for retrograde travel. This combination impacts the weekend. Don't take anything or anyone too seriously. Enjoy the show but remember all that glitters is not gold.

SUNDAY, MAY 12

This month's new moon culminates at 6:45 a.m., 22-degrees of Taurus. Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. Don't take on more than you can handle. You can develop creative projects or hobbies and find new inspiration. On the other hand, this is not a favorable time to make any kind of major decision or purchase. Treat yourself to a day of leisure; enjoy favorite sports and hobbies, spend quality time with loved ones. The Taurus moon becomes inactive at 8:29 p.m. until 11:04 p.m., when it enters Gemini.

MONDAY, MAY 13

A Gemini moon makes for a hectic start to this week. Mercury, the planetary ruler of Gemini, is preparing for retrograde travel. Therefore, its influence has greater impact today and tomorrow. Be flexible. There are likely to be unanticipated delays, breakdowns. Projects may take unexpected turns. In addition, Neptune, the planet of illusion, turns retrograde at 8:14 a.m. The Gemini moon interacts with Mercury at 5:50 p.m. and Neptune at 8:00 p.m. On the other hand, this is a great day for vacationing. Try to take extra time out to relax and unwind.

TUESDAY, MAY 14

Yesterday's planetary influences spill over into today. Avoid high pressure or stressful situations. If you have work projects you must accomplish, it's a good idea to have an alternate plan of action, just in case things don't go as planned. Stormy astrological weather prevails this morning, when the moon opposes Pluto. Choose your words carefully. Stay alert and use common sense. A lunar alignment to Mars this afternoon warns you to slow down. Drive defensively.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 15

At 5:08 a.m. the Gemini moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. A Cancer moon takes over at 7:33 a.m. However, the planet Mercury takes the spotlight today. At 2:50 p.m. Mercury, standing at 10-degrees Gemini, begins retrograde travel until June 8. Signing contracts, launching enterprises or making major commitments, purchases are off limits. You can make gains on an inner, spiritual level rather than in your external, professional world.

Faithful to find their voice

Forum for local Catholics at St. Paul's

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Area Catholics will have a chance to share their concerns with one another over the crisis in the church, thanks to Voice of The Faithful, a grassroots group that started in Wellesley.

Local residents, Kathy Ceruti of Scituate and Eileen Doherty of Hingham, have organized the meeting in the lower church at St. Paul's in Hingham at 7 p.m., Wednesday (May 22) — the results of which could evolve into the South Shore Chapter of VOTF, the women say.

"This is a great chance for people from all over the region to come together to start discussion on what we can do as a church and not just sit back and let the crisis bowl us over," Ceruti says.

And if recent history is a gauge, then the women are on to something.

VOTF, which started in reaction to the crisis in the Archdiocese of Boston regarding pedophilia in the priesthood, is not only branching out to other parts of the state but the group is also planning a summer meeting expected to draw upwards of 5,000 Catholics to the Hynes Convention Center on July 20.

Red Lion plans big expansion

Would add 36 rooms

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Picture this. You're from out of town and it's 1 a.m. The wedding party you were attending at the Red Lion Inn is beginning to filter out the door. Walking to the parking lot you find your car, close the door and turn on the headlights — possibly waking those who live nearby. Then you have to drive to another hotel because the inn doesn't have enough rooms to accommodate you.

Gerd Ordelheide, owner of Red Lion Inn, wants to change that scenario. He believes the addition of 36 rooms to the already large complex would alleviate many of the problems currently associated with the building. The 34 rooms and two bridal suites, would serve to keep customers on the property. Ordelheide also wants to add an underground parking garage to help contain some of the noise from the disbanding parties.

"Our customers are demanding accommodations and I only have 15 rooms," he said. "I end up sending them other places."

While the plans for the building aren't yet complete — Ordelheide intends to bring them in front of the Planning Board within the next four weeks — the proposed, sizable addition is quickly becoming the talk of the town.

Planning Board Chairman Al Moore, said the plan may have some

Makeup disrupting Deer Hill School

Parents split on issue

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The controversy involves a little more than just some eyeliner and blush. The decision whether to let sixth-grade girls wear makeup to school has split parents in two groups. Some parents believe it's a form of self expression, which should not be tampered with, while others believe today's youths are growing up too fast.

Deer Hill School Principal Paul Callahan said the problem boils down to a behavioral issue. He said the girls wearing the make-up are also disturbing the learning environment at the grade 4-6 elementary school.

"In order to restrict something from the school it has to be disrupting the classroom," Callahan said. "I believe this is it."

However, this issue is not that clear-cut.

School Committee chairman Rick Flynn said he's heard from many parents who voice varying opinions.

"It's been almost a 50/50 split," Flynn said. "It's a very difficult balancing act between those who feel their children can express themselves and others who feel differently."

Cohasset's Polly Logan 'to hang' in Statehouse

Part of women leaders' exhibit

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Polly Logan, the grand dame of the Massachusetts Republican Party, thought if she was ever hung in Doric Hall at the Statehouse, it would be for a different reason.

After all, Republicans give new meaning the word minority when it comes to politics in this state. And Logan, who isn't afraid to speak her mind, has at times found herself on the "outs" with both parties.

"I thought I might someday hang in there," Logan laughs. "But never with a portrait."

But that's just what is going to happen June 4-28 when the Cohasset resident becomes part of a traveling exhibition sponsored by the Boston-based Women's Education and Industrial Union.

The Women's Union is celebrating its 125th anniversary and will display 125 portraits representing women who used their position or resources for the benefit of other women and families.

New committee

Selectman Merle Brown wants to set up a new committee that would be responsible for looking at the entire town and examining how to best handle the wastewater problem. His vision is for the committee to look at both sewerage and septic systems and how these various options would be funded.

Brown believes someone from the Sewer Commission, Board of Health, Board of Selectmen and residents from different areas of town including representatives from Brewster Road, South Main Street, Fairoaks/Sohier Street and the Beechwood section of town.

"The committee's goal should be to look at all aspects and alternatives of the wastewater problem and develop a comprehensive plan to present to Town Meeting," Brown said.

Correction

In last week's Mariner it was incorrectly stated that this Tuesday, May 21 the selectmen will conduct interviews for the four engineering firms that are vying for the contract for the village improvement project. The interviews will actually be taking place on Tuesday, May 28 beginning at 6 p.m.

Permit-payment dispute doesn't open the flood gates

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Domenic Tutela, consulting engineer on Cohasset's almost $1 million flood control project, has apparently avoided a brouhaha with the town over the potential cost of replacing the tide gates at the harbor.

Selectmen were poised last week to call in Town Counsel to help resolve the dispute over who should pick up the tab for proper permits and possibly the $100,000 needed for self-regulating, replacement gates that would open as the tide rises in the harbor and allow some salt water to enter the marsh on the other side of Elm Street.

But Tutela, who is head of Wilmington-based Tutela Engineering Associates, Inc. — which also consults on the town's sewer projects and with the Water Department on its distribution systems, wells and storage tanks— said last week, it was a moot issue.

"We're not going to ask the town for anymore money for the project."

— Town Manager Mark Haddad

"The town relied on us to do the job in an efficient, proper way," he said. "There's no way I'm going to hold them accountable."

The town is anxious to put this chapter of the James Brook Flood Control saga behind it. The need to tackle the town's flooding problems surfaced 5-1/2 years ago when the village flooded after a rainy nor'easter. Images of postal workers paddling in dinghies to get to and from the post office are not the kind of memories town officials like to conjure up.

In fact, the flood control project would soon have become part of the town's history if it weren't for the Army Corps of Engineers and some irritating phragmites, which are reeds that can wreak havoc if allowed to take over a marshy area.

The flapper-style tide gates at the harbor may have to be replaced with self-regulating gates.

When replacing the so-called "head-works" at the harbor back in 1999, Tutela replaced the two tide gates and added a third out-fall pipe to relieve flooding problems by increasing the amount of water that can drain out of Jacob's Meadow through James Brook and into the harbor.

But federal officials later charged, not only were the wrong tide gates installed, but the work was completed without the proper permit from the Army Corps of Engineers. Without the permit, the Army Corps could force the town to replace the gates. Tutela said the state failed to tell him he needed Army Corps approval for the project.

Tutela, who said he already spent $57,000 trying to secure the permits from the Army Corps, said his company will pay on all costs associated with getting the necessary federal permits. Tutela had a permit from the state Department of Environmental Protection for the project.

The Army Corps of Engineers is investigating the environmental impacts of the tide gates at the harbor and whether they allow enough salt water back into the marsh. At issue are the 10-foot high reeds, called phragmites, that are growing along Jacob's Meadow. Phragmites can take over, choking out other grasses; broken stems can impede the brook's flow pattern; and the plants can cut off brook access for fish that normally eat mosquito larvae.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the town would not pay any more for the project..

"We leave it up to the engineers to get the permits," he said. "We're not going to ask the town for anymore money for the project."

Tutela tried to solve the problem by installing special wedges, propping one of the gates open a fraction to allow more salt water into the march. He is concerned that self-regulating gates would let too much water into the marsh, flooding abutters' yards.

But Tutela is willing to pick up the tab for new gates if necessary.

"This is one of my best clients," he said. "I'm going to fix this."

Obtaining the federal permit is also important because the town cannot receive all of its federal grant money for the project until it does. Federal grants covered 75 percent of the project and of that, only 90 percent has been received. This leaves almost $30,000 that the town is still expecting.

"The problem is the town has already paid for the project so we need that money to cover our expenses," said the Town Finance Director Michael Buckley.

Haddad said he expects to hear a response from the Army Corps within the next 10 days.

Town wants DEP help with gasoline contamination

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The odor of gasoline is not one of the qualities Cohasset residents usually list as a reason to move to the town.

But while the smell at the corner of South Main and Summer streets is unpleasant, the real concern is if any contaminated groundwater filters into the stream behind Spring Street or floods into abutters' basements.

That's why various public officials have written a letter to the state Department of Environmental Protection asking it to investigate.

"We're not really concerned about the outside odors having negative health impacts on residents," said Dr. Joseph Godzik, the town's health agent. "Those probably wouldn't be a significant health problem."

However, Godzik admits the contamination is likely in the groundwater, and this is where a problem could exist. Both benzene and MTBE, two gasoline components, are carcinogens.

"Whether the concentration is high enough to have detrimental effects is undetermined," Godzik said. "But anytime people are exposed to carcinogens we want to investigate."

It is believed the problem originated when a gas station occupied the area about 10 years ago. In the past, the gas station was an active retail establishment which was involved in the sale of gasoline and other petroleum products as well as servicing automobiles.

For the past several years, the building has been a commercial establishment which provides only car maintenance, no gasoline or petroleum sales.

Godzik said after the previous business left people started to complain about an odor as they walked through the area.

"Whether the concentration is high enough to have detrimental effects is undetermined."

— Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik

Workers for contractor J. D'Amico Inc., discovered the contamination about four years ago while digging a trench in the are. State clean-up laws require any contaminated groundwater work crews encounter to be filtered and treated. However the soil was not treated and was used to refill the trench.

Godzik said around 1998, the DEP was contacted and did a thorough investigation that resulted in a detailed clean-up plan which was never realized. During the investigation it was determined there was contamination of the area, but to date, it has not been fixed.

"The owner of the property claimed he didn't have enough money to implement the plan," Godzik said. "It kind of just fell by the wayside for a while."

Town Manager Mark Haddad felt the DEP should have done more.

"It is our understanding that the DEP has had some involvement in the past, including an Order of Notice to remediate the area," he wrote in a letter to the department. "Unfortunately, no follow through was undertaken and no remediation has been done."

Godzik said the problem was again brought to the town's attention about a year ago when the complaints of a foul odor were again being made on a consistent basis. He added a few months ago the calls have been coming in saying the odor seems to be getting worse. The town has received a few requests for the Board of Health to renew its investigation.

The board is currently exploring the possibility of drilling a hole in the area to monitor the ground water for pollutants. It has already taken a water sample from a nearby catch basin which revealed various traces of gasoline.

Haddad, in his letter to the DEP said this was not enough.

"It is our belief that the Board of Health's investigation falls far short of the comprehensive investigation and caution that this situation merits," he said. "We would urge you to take this matter seriously and undertake a complete and thorough investigation as soon as possible."

Representatives from the VOTF chapter at St. John the Evangelist in Wellesley will help facilitate the May 22 meeting in Hingham, says Doherty, who has attended several VOTF meetings.

"What comes out of the meetings is positive," she says. "Some cry over such an atrocity against children while at the same time feel invigorated that the group can change something."

VOTF's goals are to support those who have been abused; support priests of integrity; and shape structural change within the Catholic Church.

The Rev. James Rafferty, pastor at St. Paul's, said the church was pleased to be able to make the facility available for people to come together for both prayer and mutual support.

"The goals of (VOTF) are good," he said.

Ernie Corrigan, a VOTF spokesman, says the group's mission of providing a way for the faithful to participate in the governance of the church is connecting with a lot of Catholics. In excess of 10,000 have visited the organization's Web site and many have left comments behind or sent email messages.

"Some cry over such an atrocity against children while at the same time feel invigorated that the group can change something."

— Eileen Doherty, Hingham

"We know they are looking for a voice they can participate in," he says.

At a recent meeting, a woman drove all the way from Pennsylvania to get information to take back, says Corrigan, who adds that most Catholics "have shaken but not shattered faith."

"People are looking for a way through this – a light at the end of the tunnel," he says, adding there is a need for laity to be more involved in the operation of the church.

Ceruti of Scituate says the Hingham meeting, which will not be open to the press, is a way for South Shore Catholics to come together.

"A lot have felt they have not had a voice – this might be a good outlet," she says.

Doherty of Hingham says the time has come for change in the church.

"We need to have a forum for people to explain how they feel and what they can do."

For more information, call Ceruti at 781-545-5052 or Doherty at 781-749-7871 or visit the VOTF Web site, www.votf.org.

Cohasset's Polly Logan 'to hang' in Statehouse

said Robert Bachrach, who has done shows before, approached the organization about working together on a women leaders' exhibition.

Bachrach said his studio had an exhibition at the Boston Public Library celebrating the millenium in 2000 that paid tribute to a range of leaders.

"I thought it would be nice to do an exhibit with a particular focus on women leaders and the Women's Industrial Union is our neighbor (on Boylston Street)," Bachrach recalled. The studio donated the time and materials needed to create the portraits.

The Women's Union sought nominations and received "hundreds and hundreds," Trevisan said and wanted a range of age, geography and professional disciplines.

"It's not all inclusive, but is hopefully representative of women who have made significant contributions to the lives of other women," she said.

Trevisan described Logan, who lives in Cohasset, as a "real trail blazer" in terms of her leadership in the state Republican Party.

After its Statehouse debut, the exhibition that also includes historical photos of the Women's Union will travel to Hyannis, Fall River, Worcester, Springfield, Lowell and Wellesley.

Logan said she was proud to be included and praised the work of the Women's Union, which has "done so much good." The Union's goal is the economic self-sufficiency of women and their families and its programs include transitional housing for battered women and their children; technology training and mentoring for low-income women; and home health-care training and services for elderly and disabled adults, among other programs.

Along with each framed portrait is a 5-by-7-inch card on which each woman talks about what inspired her to make a difference, said Trevisan, who describes the notes as "wonderful, heartfelt statements."

Logan, a former Hingham resident, talked about being involved in the start of the Doric Dames, during Gov. Frank Sargent's administration, and being able to share the history of the Statehouse with others. Doric Dames provide tours of the Statehouse.

"We have one of the finest statehouses in the country," she said. "It's a great treasure to share and it's wonderful to show young people around and inspire them to get involved in government."

For her portrait Logan wore the antique "Suffragette Necklace" on loan from her son Malcolm, who is in the estate jewelry business. The necklace includes Green enamel (G), White enamel (W), and Violet colored amethyst (V) that stands for Give Women the Vote and dates back to the Edwardian Arts and Crafts Period.

Logan described the event as "very exciting."

"I'm glad they're using the Statehouse in this manner and I love Doric Hall — at least I'll be hanging there in a nice frame," she quipped.

Harbor plans make the rounds

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Dean Rizzo is busy making his rounds.

Rizzo, the executive director of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, has been shuttling his 45-minute presentation back and forth to town hall, presenting the CRC's ideas for harbor improvements over the last few months.

Rizzo's hope is to garner positive recommendations from various committees so when he goes before the selectmen to present the plans in late June, the CRC will have some support. He's asking each board he visits to make a formal recommendation on his plans before his meeting with selectmen.

After visiting with the Planning Board two weeks ago, Rizzo's latest stop was the Harbor Committee on Tuesday night.

The board politely received Rizzo's presentation, asked a few questions, and told him it would make a recommendation on the plans at a later meeting.

Rizzo's presentation includes three different options for improvements to the harbor which centers around the Captain's walk. The Captain's walk is denoted by about 10 stations surrounding the harbor each one offering historical information about the area.

- One option would make no improvements to the area with the exception of new asphalt patching to fill the reoccurring potholes. The existing walkway and infrastructure conditions would remain as they are today. This approach does not address safety issues associated with irregular and narrow sidewalk surfaces or vehicles parking on walkway areas. It also doesn't take aim at the open design of the existing railing system and general infrastructure disrepair within the waterfront area.
- Another option involves "minimum improvement" to the harbor. This consists of replacing the existing asphalt sidewalk surfaces and installing a curbing system to separate the sidewalk from parking areas. This does not include lighting, railing, sidewalk width or road width changes. Because these changes don't address safety issues, the project wouldn't be considered for either state or federal funding leaving the cost on taxpayers, Rizzo said. He estimates the cost of this project to be a little more than $300,000 — a price tag which be largely the town's responsibility.
- The third option would provide the highest level of public safety and access improvements. Along with the amenities in the second option, this proposal involves installation of new lighting, tree planting, the installation of a new wood or steel railing system and minor repairs of existing sidewalks. The estimated cost of plan is about $1.1 million but with grant funding. Rizzo said, 90 percent of the cost may be covered. The town would have to cover would be about $110,000 significantly less than the "minimum improvement" plan.

Rizzo answered questions ranging from inquiries about the width of the sidewalks to the improvements to the sea wall.

Red Lion plans big expansion

merit. Although he said he can't offer a firm opinion on the matter until he has seen the building plans, the extra rooms may serve to reduce the complaints the Red Lion has received.

"An underground lot would probably subdue a lot of the excess noise," Moore said. "This is an interesting way to work with the problem."

He added keeping party-goers on the premises may also help reduce the traffic situation. In recent years, many have complained how congested South Main Street can get when the Red Lion is hosting a function.

"Keeping all the cars on site and underground would probably help out," Moore said.

Rena Karp, an abutter to the property who has voiced her complaints about the noise at Red Lion, said she doesn't think the plans will help.

"The underground parking lot may help after they blast ledge away for three years," she joked. "I think the Red Lion is big enough as it is."

However, some see another potential bonus to having more people lodging in the village area to local businesses.

Ordelheide said local merchants are having a difficult time securing customers and thinks this would bring more customers in and expand their consumer base.

"This would give the shops on South Main Street a lot more flow," he said.

Domenic Micarelli, the president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, said he cautiously supports the expansion. Again, without having seen the plans, he couldn't firmly commit either way.

"The Chamber is almost always in favor of expanding business," he said. "What's good for business is usually good for the town."

Micarelli said that Ordelheide has done a lot good for the village in the past and feels the new project would probably do the same.

However, before any construction begins Ordelheide will have to jump through a variety of hoops to secure the proper permitting.

Bob Egan, the town's building inspector, said the Red Lion will have to go before the Zoning Board of Appeals, the Planning Board and the Sewer Commission in order to gain approval for the project. He said would be "an expansion of a special permit use" for a hotel/motel in the downtown business district.

Police tackle traffic problems

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Police Department, in response to a request by the selectmen to investigate various traffic problems in town, provided Town Manager Mark Haddad with four recommendations.

Three of traffic issues involved the Ripley Road and Sohier Street area where Police Chief Robert Jackson said there is a perceived traffic problem by some residents.

"It's really no worse than any other area," he said. "There's a bit of a speeding problem but we have that everywhere in town."

The first issue that was talked about during a recent selectmen's meeting was making Sohier Street one-way from Ripley Road to North Main Street. Jackson said he has reviewed traffic studies done in the area and determined making the road one-way would force approximately 500 more vehicles to use the already crowded center of town or North Main and Ripley Road.

"To restrict traffic around the perimeter of town would force it all into the village area which is too congested as it is," he said.

In lieu of making the area one-way, Jackson suggested putting a 30 mile-per-hour speed sign up near 17 Sohier St. He also recommended placing a Slow Children sign just east of the Sohier Street, Ripley Road intersection. He thought both signs would reduce the flow of traffic in the area.

Another idea the selectmen wanted the police department to investigate involved replacing the working set of lights at Ripley Road and Sohier Street with a four-way stop. This is one of the busiest intersections in town with more than 1,500 vehicles using it during a given 24-hour period and probably double that amount during Music Circus shows.

However, over the last six years the police department has not investigated any crashes at the site.

The intersection currently has four crosswalks and the lights provide a walk-only light on the primary elementary school walking route. Noting that the impact from the train on the intersection in not known, Jackson recommended leaving the intersection alone.

Another concern the department looked into involved a suggestion by a resident to direct truck and emergency vehicle traffic to turn right onto Ripley Road when traveling east on Sohier Street. However, Jackson said pursuant to Massachusetts law, a town cannot restrict where emergency vehicles can go, therefore he did not recommend this plan.

The last concern centered around Hillside Drive. The problem occurs when exiting the road, the view is partially obstructed by pine trees on private property. The Department of Public Works and the Police Department have requested the owner cut back the trees but he has declined. Therefore, Chief Jackson suggested putting up a "blind drive ahead" sign in the vicinity of 482 Beechwood St. He felt this would make drivers more aware of Hillside Drive.

Town Manager Mark Haddad agreed with all of Jackson's recommendations and will talk with the Department of Public Works about installing the signs.

Several concerned sixth-grade parents, who declined to provide their names, said they felt the school had established standards which have been blatantly disregarded by some students and parents.

"For kids who are trying to be good and do things the right way these other students who are getting away with wearing make-up — it sends the wrong message," one parent said.

But according to School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo, who is a lawyer, the committee may have little control over the matter.

Citing a recent Supreme Court decision, DeGiacomo said a student's appearance cannot be restricted unless it, "materially or substantially interferes with the operation of the school." He explained the ruling was an extremely strict and would prove difficult to get around.

"We have to understand what we can do and what we can't." DeGiacomo said. "Like it or not, that's the law."

Superintendent of Schools Edward Malvey said he talked with town counsel, who advised him the best course of action may be to put a line in the student handbook, which says the school department discourages the use of make-up.

"The handbook needs to at least make an attempt to stop the use of make-up at the school," said one sixth-grade parent at last week's School Committee meeting. "These kids should not be wearing it at that age."

Chartis Tebbetts, a member of the board, said the school doesn't have to put up with a situation it's not comfortable with.

"There can be an environment that is fostered to try and make our standards what we want," she said. "We can do something about this."

The problem seems to stem from a peer pressure situation, in which those who are sporting the make-up are harassing those who aren't.

Callahan said peer pressure is an issue which is very tough to handle.

"We can't be there at all times monitoring the students every step of the way," he said. "That's where the problem is."

Flynn, the School Committee chairman, said the responsibility should fall on parents' shoulders, not the school's.

"Parents really should be the ones, who monitor how their kids look when they leave for school," Flynn said. "They should also note how they look when they get back."

School Committee member Pat Martin said in lieu of banning make-up, maybe the school should look into getting a speaker to educate the children about peer pressure.

"It might make those, who are fighting the good fight, feel stronger," she said.

School Committee member Jane Pescatore said students wearing makeup was a separate issue from the behavioral problems.

"The problems with a few students wearing make-up doesn't seem to warrant a change in the handbook," she said.

Callahan said he hopes to have the issue ironed out by the beginning of the school year, if not sooner. He said he will be meeting with parents and school officials on the matter.

"This isn't something you want to let fester," Callahan said. "We've had some very productive meetings and hope to come to a resolution before too long."

Celebrating Gulf River's history

Did you know ...

- that President Abraham Lincoln's genealogical roots trace to our Gulf River and its tributary, Bound Brook?
- that setting the line between Cohasset and Scituate down the middle of the Gulf River may have been the first "federalist" act in the "New World"?
- that people used to sail iceboats on the Gulf?

You'll learn about these and other little-known events of long ago in a slide presentation on the History of the Gulf River at the Spring Meeting of the Gulf Association Wednesday, May 29, at 7:30 p.m. at Lightkeeper's House Government Island, Cohasset Harbor.

You'll learn about these and other little-known events of long ago in a slide presentation on the History of the Gulf River.

John Hartshorne, past president of the Gulf Association and past vice president of the Cohasset Historical Society, has made a study of the fascinating history of the Gulf River, sometimes called Cohasset's and Scituate's "best kept secret." With photos taken the length and breadth of the River, he will show the remnants of water mills and salt hay harvesting that made the Gulf an artery of enterprise.

Also, Gulf Association President Jim Spellman will report results of an Association membership survey and progress in conducting a Natural Resource Inventory of the Gulf.

Members and friends of the Gulf are urged to attend this informative meeting. Attendance is free and open to all.

Relay walkers to sample local restaurants' fare

'Taste' starts at 6:30 p.m.

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

There won't be any hungry walkers when the annual Cohasset Relay For Life walk gets underway tomorrow at Alumni Field.

The "Taste of the Relay" features about 12 South Shore restaurants, which will provide a small sampling of their menu to participants. Each restaurant sets up a booth in the middle-high school cafeteria and offers a few meals that best represent its fare.

Along with the Red Lion Inn, Atlantica, and French Memories, other restaurants, such as the Winston Tea Shop, Schooners, and McKenzie's will be represented at the event.

Jeff Mushin, who is the volunteer on the planning committee handling this aspect of the relay, came up with the idea three years ago. He has worked in the food industry his entire life and describes the business as something that is very special to him — one he is very passionate about.

Mushin started the Taste to combine his love of the food industry and his compassion for those affected by cancer.

"We all know people that have passed away from the disease, everyone is affected by it," Mushin said. "This is my way to try and help.

He credits the restaurants for volunteering what would be a lucrative Friday night at their respective establishments, by sending both chefs and staff to the event.

"It's no small feat what these restaurants are doing," he said. "All the credit should go to them."

The Taste has been very successful in the past and raised nearly $1,300 last year, which more than doubled its total from 2000.

Mushin said he is again trying to double the amount of money raised and is aiming for around $2,500 this year.

"We're not going to stop serving food till it's all gone," he said.

While the money will obviously help in the cause to find a cure for cancer, the Taste also serves the restaurants' needs.

Brendan Olan, former chef at the Red Lion and currently the owner and chef of McKenzie's at Widow's Walk in Scituate, has participated in the Taste since its inception.

He said the event is a great way to get some visibility for his restaurant and show potential customers his pricing and his cuisine.

"It exposes us to a group of people who otherwise may never sample our food," he said. "It can really help business."

However, that is not the only reason Olan is involved with the Taste. Both of his parents are cancer survivors and Olan considers the pursuit of the cure one of the greatest causes in which to be involved.

"Part of the reason they're still around is because of all the money that's already been raised," he said. "I hope someday everyone will be able to survive this disease."

Joe Dooley, general manager for the Red Lion Inn, said his chef Emmanuel DuBois will be preparing enough food to feed up to 400 people. He added with the event being in Cohasset, the inn feels especially proud to represent the town.

"It's always special to be involved with charities," he said. "We love to participate in the Relay For Life."

The Taste of the Relay will be from 6:30- 8 p.m. on May 17 in the school cafeteria. Tickets are $5 a person and can be purchased at the door.

700 walkers expected at Relay For Life

The American Cancer Society's sixth annual Relay For Life event in Cohasset starts at 3 p.m. Friday, May 17, and runs through Saturday, May 18, at Cohasset High School, 143 Pond St.

. More than 700 walkers from the community and surrounding towns are expected to raise $135,000 to support American Cancer Society programs of research, education, advocacy and local patient services. Walkers will keep at least one team member moving around the track throughout the night.

Karen Burns, volunteer planning committee member, cancer survivor and Relay For Life Celebration on the Hill Ambassador, will speak at the Opening Ceremony.

Opening Ceremony at 6 p.m. welcomes walkers and kicks off the Relay For Life event in Cohasset.

Cancer Survivors' Lap, immediately follows the Opening Ceremony, honors all cancer survivors as they walk the first lap around the track together.

Third annual Taste of Relay from 6:30 to 8 p.m.: Area residents will have the opportunity to sample food from local restaurants including Atlantica, Red Lion Inn, Red Parrot of Hull, Lobster Express and Schooners of Hull. The restaurants will transform the cafeteria of Cohasset High School into one of the finest dining establishments on the South Shore. Tickets to the event, which is open to the public, are $5 per person and will be sold at the door. All proceeds will benefit the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life in Cohasset.

Luminaria Ceremony is at 9 p.m.: Candle ceremony paying tribute to all people whose lives have been touched by cancer.

Closing Ceremony, Saturday, May 18, from 11:45 to noon: Team awards presented and final lap with all participants.

Band concerts

During the past 11 seasons, concert funding has been provided through the generosity of the South Shore Playhouse Associates, Inc. The South Shore Music Circus donations are matched by a grant from the American Federation of Musicians, in New York City.

Based upon continued South Shore Music Circus funding, the schedule for the 2002 season is Tuesday, July 9, and Tuesday, July 23, at 7:30 p.m. on the Cohasset Common.

Performances will be by the 30-piece South Shore Concert Band under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh.

Concerts are free of charge and the public is invited. It is a good idea to bring either lawn chairs or blankets to sit on, and from time to time, insect repellent is a good item to have available. You may call the recreation office at 383-4109 to check on the status of concerts should you be in doubt as to weather conditions.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

BEING A MOM

Hello Cohasset! Let me start off by saying that I hope every Mom her in town had a wonderful Mothers Day this past Sunday. Being a mom is something that I had always dreamed of when I was a little girl and now, it is the best and happiest part of my life.

NEW ARRIVAL

Speaking of being a mom, a very proud and happy mom called me from the hospital on Friday to announce the birth of her second daughter. Joseph and Lauren (Bradley) Curley, along with big sister Madeline Ann would like to announce the birth of Margaret Adelaide Curley.

Margaret was born on May 9 at 3:23 in the morning and weighed in at a whopping 10 lbs., 7 oz and was 22-1/2 ins. long! Margaret and Madeline are the grandchildren of Margaret Pitt-Bradley of Cohasset, Christine Edda of Clinton, Conn., Peter Curley and Elaine Gordon of Westbrook, Conn. "Thank heavens for little girls...." Congratulations to all!

BUY A BRICK

The South Shore Community Center Nursery School is gearing up for a much needed change and update to its playground. In addition, construction of a pedestrian-only walkway into the existing play space and Nursery School entrance will occur. This will be a gated walkway from the street that will separate the children from the cars that drive in and out of the parking lot.

The South Shore Community Nursery School Playground Development Team invite you to be a part of a very special, yet limited commemorative opportunity. The first major fundraiser for this project will be paving the walkway with bricks purchased by the community. The bricks and pavers can be donated to a family, child, business or in memory of a loved one. Please use the brick campaign form inserted in this week's Mariner or call Trish Hart at 781-383-9209 for more details.

The numbers of bricks are limited so make sure to place your order quickly.

TV STAR

A very proud Gramma wanted to let us know about her very talented grandson, Sam Game. Sam recently starred in a TV ad for the show "Arthur". The ad ran this winter and spring on PBS stations throughout the country. Sam is nine years old and in fourth grade at the Deer Hill School. He currently performed in the Cohasset Dramatic Club's production of "Oliver".

Sam's grandma, Ruth Sisson, should certainly be proud of this young man as I know his entire family is. Great job, Sam!

SCHOOL COUNCILS

Congratulations are in order for the newly elected members of the School Councils for the 2002-2003 school year at the various schools. Vicky Neaves was elected at the Osgood School, Melissa Grasz and Susan Jaffe were elected at the Deer Hill School and at the Middle/High School it is Debbie Shadd and Helene Lieb-Lappen.

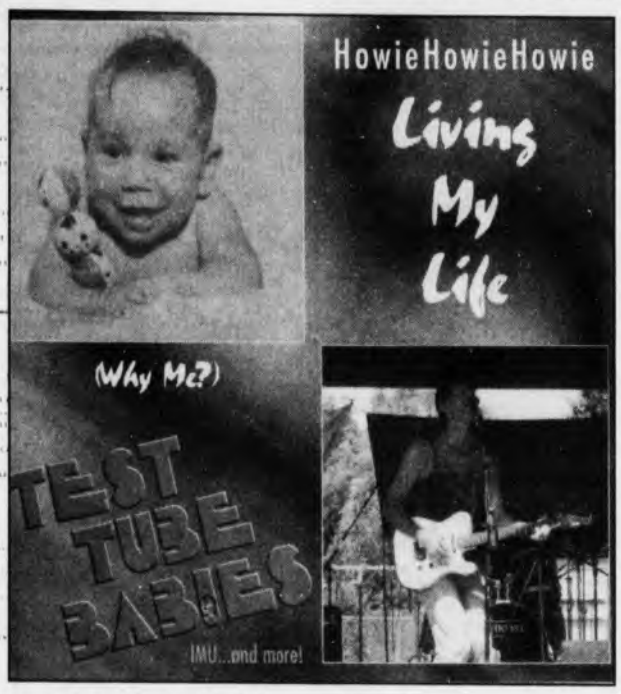
This local lawyer really knows how to rock

Has greatest hits CD

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Going into his office you'd be hard pressed to discern his former life. He has the obligatory diplomas adorning his walls, proving he is in fact a lawyer. The bookshelves, which are filled with various case studies and the computer that sits on his desk, wouldn't make one think twice.



The jacket of Howie Altholtz's greatest hits CD.

But then, turning to look on the back wall, something seems out of a place. A picture of him and Ringo Starr, a picture with Les Vegas, the lead singer of Blue Oyster Cult, and a photo of him and Paul Pierce. It's easy to pass over the guitar carved into the name plate on his desk until you realize that this lawyer used to be in a rock band.

Howie Altholtz of Summer Street is releasing his greatest hits album as well as performing at "After Before," an artistic night dedicated to the change in music due to Sept. 11.

Altholtz will play an acoustic version of his song "One People," which he wrote in response to the terrorist attacks. His song was discovered while Altholtz recently performed the song in a Hingham coffee shop. He was approached and asked to play the inspiring song at the group exhibition at the Attleboro Museum on May 19.

Altholtz, who lives with his wife and two daughters, said the song holds a unifying theme to it and is intended to be uplifting. The guitar-driven song which features the hook, "who killed all the people," is just that.

"I didn't want it to be too morbid," he said.

The Brooklyn native began playing the guitar when he was 10-years-old though he never took a lesson in his life. He attended the Woodstock music festival when he was 15, which he credits for setting in motion his love of music that remains with him today.

He attended college at the State University of New York - Newpaltz, in the Woodstock area, which he said was a real hippie haven. He lived next to Todd Rundgren, a renowned guitarist, for six years and said he was immediately immersed in the music scene.

"There were a lot of really great technical musicians in the area," Altholtz said. "However, there weren't a lot of great writers."

He said a lot of the musicians were moved and inspired by his lyrics, which gave Altholtz an opening into the scene.

"I'm only an average guitar player, but I'm able to evoke a lot of emotion with my lyrics," he said.

Altholtz describes his songs as a mixture of political messages and love and relationship ballads. He said he hopes to invoke strong passion in all of his work.

"All of my stuff is intended to make people think how we could change our lives to create a better world," he said.

Following his college years, Altholtz formed the Test Tube Babies, named after the subject which was in the news at the time, in the early 70s. Joined by Les Vegas, and singer Susie Ronson, wife of Mick Ronson who was the guitarist for David Bowie, the band put out a few albums before Altholtz said he wanted to take the band in a more hard-edge direction.

He then decided to form the band IMU were he played along side the drummer from Flock of Seagulls, A.J Mazetti and his brother Peter, who played the guitar for Young Rascals for eight years..

After touring much of the United States and Canada, Altholtz said he started to feel the effects of life on the road. In 1981 he opened up for Joan Jett in New York, which was his last show for quite some time.

"I'm only an average guitar player, but I'm able to evoke a lot of emotion with my lyrics,"
— Howie Altholtz, Summer Street

"It was getting to the point where I had done what I wanted to do with being in a band," he said. "I felt I needed to get a real life at some point."

He moved to Boston with a friend and started a small entertainment magazine which eventually developed into a full service advertising business for concert listings.

Altholtz, who's always been an entrepreneurial person, then took an offer to join a major advertising company in the city, but said he didn't enjoy the work.

Howie Altholtz of Summer Street, right, with Huey Lewis of Huey Lewis and the News at a recent fundraiser.

He started going to law school at night in 1985 and said he didn't feel like he was "selling out" to his rock star days.

"My creative expression through music and entrepreneurial ventures are one and the same," Altholtz said. "You just have to believe in yourself and not be shy."

A break came when one of his career counselors at law school mentioned that law firm marketing was going to be a huge industry in the next few years.

Altholtz proceeded to write a letter to the top 10 Boston law firms detailing his ideas to incorporate a marketing department into each of the companies. Eventually, the firm of Peabody and Brown responded and offered Altholtz a job.

"I kind of made it up as I went along," he said. "No one else was doing it so I had total freedom."

After seeing his budget grow to $1 million and the number of lawyers in the firm triple, Altholtz felt he needed a new challenge.

He said he saw the field of intellectual property growing and felt adding an entertainment law department to the firm. This practice deals with contracts, trademarks, licensing agreements and other aspects of the industry, something that was right up Altholtz's alley.

"Coming from the music business I had great credibility with the artists," he said. "And after practicing law I had the same with the lawyers, it was a great situation."

However, in July of 2000, Peabody and Brown merged with a firm in New York and brought the total number of lawyers in the company to around 500, which was too many for Altholtz's liking.

Altholtz, who moved to Cohasset in 1999, took a couple months off to be his family and try and find an new challenge. He ended up starting his own private practice as well as acting as the head of business affairs for Digital Music Network.

"I'll be maintaining my practice until something more interesting comes along," he said.

Altholtz still remains close at home with his music roots and one of his clients is Noel Redding, Jimi Hendrix's bass player.

He said the music business hasn't changed much and often times is hard upon artists. He said the business is not always fair to the musicians.

"Artists are still getting screwed," he said. "I'm working to try and bring a measure of fairness to them."

Altholtz is a fan of today's more alternative musicians such as Nirvana and Pearl Jam but still holds a place in his heart for some of his favorites including the Rolling Stones and the Beatles.

"I like edgy music," he said. "It's important to have songs that carry a message, whether it's in the lyrics or the music."

Girls will be girls

It's nothing new. Girls and makeup go back to the days of Cleopatra and before. But makeup on the faces of elementary-aged schoolgirls is a little early, and no doubt a sign of the times.

What a shame that at a point in their lives when youthful skin, bright eyes and a big smile are true beauty, "little" girls feel the need to add a lot of "extras."

There's even a little added spin — some girl-to-girl harassment among those who paint their faces and those who don't.

All this is interfering with the learning environment at the Deer Hill School, which still houses the sixth-grade and will until the grades are realigned once the school projects are completed, allowing the "older kids" to move up to the middle school. (Once there, sixth-grade girls will undoubtedly emulate their eighth-grader peers).

The issue is splitting Deer Hill parents into two groups: those who think makeup is inappropriate for 10- and 11-year-olds and those who believe in "free expression."

We remember the days when public schools had stricter rules about dress and most of us turned out just fine. It never occurred to us that our rights were being trampled on. Can't imagine what our parents would have said if we'd complained.

It wasn't until high school that makeup horror stories emerged. There was the girl whose eyelash curler locked in the closed position on the eyelashes of her right eyelid on the school bus on the way to school. Horrified, we formed a circle around her and walked her to the nurse's office.

Another girl's hair, which was loaded with hairspray, got stuck to her date's face at the junior prom ending a promising relationship.

And there were endless mascara smudging problems that made a lot of us look like raccoons by the end of the school day.

So in many ways, times haven't changed except for the girls' ages and the authority of the school.

In this case, we think Principal Paul Callahan ought to be able to set the rules. If makeup is a problem, then he should be able to tell the girls and their parents, that no made-up faces will be allowed in school.

There's lots of time after school, on vacations and weekends when the girls can exercise their right for free expression.

We don't think the legal community should intimidate schools when they set rules based on commonsense.

In Hingham, the high school principal has successfully banned wearing hats and hoods in school, and the school system is still standing and sending graduates on to successful colleges.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Village plans

TO THE EDITOR:

I agree with Mr. deLima's letter in the May 9 issue of the Mariner.

On page 2 of the same issue there is mention that the various proposals submitted for the Village Improvements Design and Construction Plans have been reviewed for the selectmen to interview on May 21. Not to disparage the people involved in narrowing down the field (Dean Rizzo, Mark Haddad, and Liz Harrington), but couldn't there have been at least one member of the review group that actually lives in town. I am not questioning the motives or qualifications of the group, but I think at least one resident could have been found to balance the group a bit.

Russell Bonetti
20 Parker Ave.

Editor's note the Mariner incorrectly reported the interviews would take place May 21. They are scheduled for Tuesday, May 28, starting at 6p.m..

Shedding lamplight on village character

TO THE EDITOR:

Mr. DeLima asserts that "no one can responsibly suggest that these Victorian adornments (black iron lampposts) are suitable to the style of a colonial village". Of course not! Colonial villages didn't have lampposts! The colonial period (which ended in 1776) had been over for about 135 years before Cohasset got street lights (in the early 1900's).

If Cohasset is to be classed as a "colonial village" I should be reclassified as a teenager! Granted, a few houses date back to before the Revolution, but the character of the village center is somewhere between Victorian and New England idiosyncratic. It's a few decades too late to worry about mongrelizing it! Its eclectic montage has a certain charm and I don't advocate either demongrelizing or modernization.

As to street lights: we could eliminate them and so simulate colonial conditions, we could retain the ugly wooden poles and inefficient lights we have, or we could install attractive lampposts with efficient light sources and effective spacing and location. What is more attractive and appropriate to our village than the Victorian style lamppost? The lamppost catalogues have many other styles, few of which would find favor with our conservative fellow townspeople.

Although government agencies provide our roads, fire and police protection, water etc, the multitude of cultural and recreational services with which Cohasset is blessed were conceived, established and are operated by non-governmental groups of public spirited citizens. Our various Boards are generally limited to regulation and they are seldom expected to be initiators. Well, no good deed goes unpunished, so the initiators usually have to suffer a lot of sniping and insinuations about motives etc. Sometimes the naysayers thwart the constructive efforts, usually without substituting anything useful. It takes a great deal of effort to accomplish something in the public arena, but all too little effort is needed to block it. Sure, democracy affords us the right to question and criticize, but that right should be exercised constructively.

Seems to me that the attempts to emasculate the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation are childishly irresponsible. It would make more sense to take advantage of its initiative and seed funding, participate to serve the public interest (rather than to work off private resentments), and help mold the results for the benefit of the town. The critics should beware of Pyrrhic victories!

Somebody has noted that there isn't much passion for rescuing the harbor area from its run-down appearance. Quite true, unfortunately. Most of the happenings in the world, good and bad, happened because small groups of determined people pushed their agenda while the other 98 percent sat on their duffs and let it happen.

And so it is here in Cohasset! Many people are saying, about the opponents of revitalization: "Who do they think they are, anyway"! But their indignation doesn't translate into effective support, or even into attendance at the seminars. Yes, it's always much easier to block something than to do the hard work of accomplishing something.

Big message, low turnout

TO THE EDITOR:

Bob Bigelow, one of the country's top activists for the "play" in youth sports activities visited Cohasset on April 24. He appeared courtesy of the Cohasset Social Service League and the PSO.

News of Bigelow's appearance was given to the heads of the various sports leagues in town and anybody who was involved with youth activities as early as mid February. Calls were made to many league leaders. Most indicated they would go to see him. With it all, in a town which has significant participation in youth sports, it was shocking to see less than 30 people show up.

What you see in Cohasset is what the organizations that defend youths in youth sports say is typical. The answers to the questions are usually the same, too.

Do the same people lead the leagues year after year? What are their qualifications? Is there a way to report incidents or evaluate coaches?

One sports board member told me that coaches aren't picked by those who volunteer, nor are interviews conducted with those who check off the little box on application forms (if there are any) saying they want to volunteer. To coach, he continued, one needs to make phone calls and lobby privately to get appointed. Typically, there is no required education for most coaches, and many have none. The system isn't all bad, but, as in many communities, it can improve. The first step is that leaders can't take the view that Bigelow sessions are for everybody else. The next is to correct known problems.

We're facing a situation of adult interests over that of youth in the construction of the new baseball diamonds. They are being built in such as way, per the plans, that either batters or fielders will have to have the sun in their eyes while playing. This means that novice players, those learning the game, will be taking their developing, not developed, abilities, and looking in to the sun with a hard ball coming at them. Would you shine sunlight in the face of a kid learning to catch a fly ball or batting? Nobody who cares about kids ever would purposely. That's what the fields do, though.

Why would somebody do this? Is it for the Conservation Commission? Is it for the abutters? Is it to facilitate better parking? It favors the adults, not the kid who is going to have a ball hit or thrown at him and not see it with the sun in his face. Is that going to be your kid? A case may be made for the fact that the present (Barnes) field has a good record, as it is generally pointed in the same direction as the planned new fields. However, as a person who commonly evaluates safety, I'll tell you that having three fields in the same direction triples the chances of injury. Isn't anyone else seeing this?

Who is standing up for the kids here? If only one field can be built instead of two, one safe one will beat two where there is the built in contingency of potentially permanent injury. Care for the kids will dictate a different design. But watch what happens, and question those who are approving the designs, who are, coincidentally, those who hand out the liability waivers you sign on the application forms to indemnify them. (You don't have to sign those waivers. You can't sign away your right to sue, but in the case of an accident, your signed form will be brought into court and your signing away your right will probably be costly to eradicate.) The waiver does nothing to protect the kids. When asked about both the waiver and the new diamond's position, Cohasset baseball officials stated reference to league rules/paperwork. This is the same rule book which also states that league board members are to be elected by league members. (That's you if your kid's in the league.) Is there anyone alive who remembers a membership election for Cohasset baseball league board members?

I suggest reading the books that are out about the travesty of parental influence in youth sports. Read about the incidents and conditions which have made this a culture of parental entertainment, not one of play for the kids. Then do something about it. Two of the books are: "Why Johnny Hates Sports" by Fred Engh of the National Alliance, and the one Bob offered, "Just Let the Kids Play."

As Bob said, and both books explain, 70 percent of the kids who get into youth sports drop out by the age of 13. They are turned off, and at a young age where they should be exploring everything. It's play, right? Not here. Not in many towns. He also mentioned how good and talented volunteers are usually bumped out by the network of people who literally take over as league leaders. Few communities recognize problems until awakened. Maybe before worse happens, if the community awakens, there won't be a kid sustaining a head injury when the sun gets in his eyes and the line drive hits him on the field that was built for such an accident to happen.

"Doing it for the kids" is just that. Those who turned out for Bigelow took the first step.

When your wife has breast cancer

LOCAL VIEW

DONALD IVAS

My wife is walking 60 miles from Fitchburg to Boston next weekend in the Avon Three Day Walk for breast cancer. There will be upwards of 5,000 women walking this route to raise awareness, money and celebrate their own recovery or memorialize their own losses. While the women publicly demonstrate their strength and resolve, where will all the men who are associated with these brave souls be?

I am the husband of a breast cancer survivor. These words do not just roll off the tongue, the "C" word is not something you want to bring home to meet your family. In fact, one in nine women are visited by breast cancer, which translates into much collateral damage in the form of husbands, parents, brothers, sisters, children and friends. My children and I will be at the Boston Common to welcome home the weary crowd of marchers. Yet the path does not end there, cancer is now an unwelcome but very real guest that entered into my wife's life and my family's life. How do we accommodate this change in our daily life? How do we live with the uncertainty of this disease? These are questions that prompted me to devise an outline for a thread of discussion to create a feeling of connectedness with other men in similar situations.

I am proud of what my wife is hoping to accomplish by walking next weekend and I am in awe of what she had to endure to get to this point in her life.

Of course men being men, we want to fight, we want to work, we want to make everything all right. This instinct is natural and healthy to a point, then the struggle just creates more stress and we need alternatives. We need to be realists, we need to be helpful, in short we need to be present. I have come to realize that although this disease is in my wife's body, it runs through our relationship, our family and our daily life, however subtle or overt. There is a place for men to be, besides helping that significant other, there needs to be a time and place to help yourself. Only other plane crash survivors know what it is like to survive a plane crash, only men that live with and support women through cancer know what it is like. These are the men who need to get together and share their stories and experience in a group sponsored by the Social Service League.

I am proud of what my wife is hoping to accomplish by walking next weekend and I am in awe of what she had to endure to get to this point in her life. There can be a silver lining to this cloud called cancer, we can learn to take the positive perspective, we can be mindful of what we are doing on any given day, we can live in the moment and realize just how fragile all of life really is. Our time is now more precious, our gratitude has been highlighted through the pain and we realize there are always others in worse predicaments.

If there are men who have had similar experiences and would like to reconcile some of the resulting turmoil there now is a place for you.

Donald J. Ivas L.C.S.W. is director of the Cohasset Social Service League. For more information on this group or others call 781-383-0771 or e-mail sslcohasset@worldnet.att.net.

Our privacy is slipping away

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The latest tiny, almost imperceptible step toward the complete loss of personal privacy was taken last week in a Boca Raton, Fla., medical clinic. This time it was voluntary. Next time? Who knows?

Papa Jeffrey Jacobs, mama Leslie, and son Derek had microchips the size of a grain of rice, each containing their detailed medical history, implanted under the skin of their upper arms.

Now, should one of them be transported unconscious to the hospital, emergency room crews could scan their bodies and learn in an instant that Jeffrey has had a spinal fusion, Leslie has a heart valve abnormality and Derek is allergic to common antibiotics.

It could be a life-saver for any one of them and they volunteered for it, so what's wrong with that? Nothing —until you consider what else can be put on the implanted chip and how easy it is for a voluntary act by an individual to become a law for everyone.

Recall, please, the history of the seat belt in Massachusetts. First the wearing of it was a good idea, then a strong suggestion, then a law to be used only in conjunction with another traffic law, and now a law unto itself, carrying a fine and other accoutrements, all in the name of safety.

Given the parlous times in which we live and 21st century technological achievements, it's easy to trade the perils of freedom and privacy for the comforts of security that a microchip of personal information or a strategically placed TV camera can bring.

Steps have already been taken to introduce the all-seeing camera into the privacy equation.

Steps have already been taken to introduce the all-seeing camera into the privacy equation.

Last summer, the city of Tampa, Fla., installed 36 tiny remote-controlled cameras on poles above the streets in the high-crime Ybor City district. The camera lenses had the capability of zooming in on the faces of individuals. A data bank was checked to see if they were wanted.

This brought down the wrath of some unusually bedfellows — Dick Armey, the conservative Republican representative from Texas, and the American Civil Liberties Union, which is usually described as liberal left-wing.

"Do we really want a society where one cannot walk down the street without Big Brother tracking our every move?" asked Armey. At the same time Washington, D. C., itself was experimenting with surveillance cameras at 39 of its busiest intersections to catch motorists who ran red lights. The tally from August, 1999, to June, 2001, was 231,797 citations, good for $12.3 million in fines to the city treasury.

A similar red light camera system in San Diego was thrown out by Superior Court Judge Ronald Styn because it was run for the government by a private firm, Lockheed Martin, with a $271 fine for each conviction, of which Lockheed Martin received $70.

There are so many surveillance cameras on London, England, streets that they say you can't get through a typical day without being captured on tape at least eight times and possibly as many as 300 times. You might say it's getting to be a way of life in Old Blighty.

"The vast majority of people know they have nothing to fear from them unless they are up to no good," said a spokesman for the British Home Office.

"What you're looking at in Britain, with saturation closed circuit TV cameras in every nook and cranny of the country, is what you'll be seeing all over the United States in the next five years," said Simon Davies, head of a Brit civil rights and privacy group.

That and a microchip in every arm.

Finneran gets an A in political know-how

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

Recap and analysis of state government for the week ending May 10.

At the Statehouse this week, it was still all about Finneran, but now it's about the New Finneran.

Satisfaction with this year's budget process in the House was palpable. Representatives who long could be counted on for a grumpy quote about the House speaker now were praising the process by which the House considered which taxes to raise, then which spending to restore.

Speaker Thomas Finneran has spent weeks now getting input from members, include ones who don't like his traditional style. He's laid the groundwork for budget balancing by talking openly about the pain involved in this year's budget. His detractors seemed taken aback; in the jaded atmosphere atop Boston Common, sudden openness can make people nervous.

Nevertheless, it was not only appreciated, but effective. In part no doubt to the speaker's early warnings about the difficulties of the budget situation, a Boston Herald opinion poll this week confirmed what legislators were already reporting: the public thinks tax hikes are appropriate this year. In 1990, when thousands of people rallied against new taxes on Boston Common, not many believed the rhetoric about the foolishness of spending cuts. This year, the balance of credibility seemed to have shifted.

The causes of the change were clear in hindsight. The status quo may have become untenable for the speaker, so he changed it. Finneran was in some trouble last December. Rep. Daniel Bosley, D-North Adams, made clear he was willing to give voice to the dissatisfaction the rank-and-file was feeling, after a budget process in which the regular membership felt locked out of the process, abused and in some cases deceived.

So Finneran consulted with a series of government and political veterans, who seem to have helped him implement an under-appreciated political truth: leadership stays powerful by understanding where the "followership" wants to go. Finneran gathered a consensus from his members and took responsibility for selling it to the public. As a result he's reversed the erosion of respect that routinely subsumes the authority of leaders such as Cardinal Law.

The next plot development in this story will be whether the change is real, and permanent. Signs are mixed. Finneran countenanced the filing of amendments by his lieutenants that others perceive as haughty and obnoxious shots across the bow of his foes. These include bids to take away the power of judges to administer their courthouses, and to make Clean Elections-funded gubernatorial candidate Warren Tolman pay back public campaign finance dollars. The courts have ruled Finneran is in the wrong for refusing to fund the Clean Elections system, and the eye-poking amendments are seen as Finneran's response.

Still, the budget as a package is the most important thing the Legislature does, and Finneran's performance on this one, contrasted with the last one, raises the possibility that he's the rarest form of politician: one whose hearing improves with age.

As the House deliberated its budget, the proposal to change judicial administrative rules was just one of numerous legal stories in the headlines:

This and that

• SJC openly objects to budget amendment on courts. The justices of the court took the rare step of sending a letter to Beacon Hill leaders, and holding a press conference, to express their concerns about an outside section that would shift management control over courts from administrative justices to clerk-magistrates. The jurists said their branch of government should only be reorganized after a public process of hearings and deliberation.

Finneran gathered a consensus from his members and took responsibility for selling it to the public.

• Mihos and Levy ruled in the right, Swift the wrong. The Supreme Judicial Court said Tuesday (May 7) that the Turnpike Twins were improperly fired – that the high-profile dismissals that did Swift so much damage were based "a difference of opinion" rather than firing offenses. Jordan Levy and Christy Mihos may continue to serve on the Massachusetts Turnpike Board. The court found Swift lacked due cause to fire the pair. Mihos said he will continue his federal lawsuit claiming his First Amendment rights were violated by Swift during the hearings that led to the firings. That case could eventually result in depositions of figures such as James Kerasiotes, the former head of the Central Artery project.

• Lopez formally accused of bad conduct by CJC. The Council on Judicial Conduct officially told the Supreme Judicial Court that Judge Maria Lopez had violated canons of judicial behavior during an infamous 2000 molestation trial. The CJC asked the SJC to convene a public hearing into the facts of the matter. The SJC could reprimand or suspend Lopez if it finds her to have abused her position, or limit her to hearing only certain types of cases; only the Legislature can permanently remove a judge, which it has declined to do in the Lopez affair.

Lopez was determined to have behaved improperly on six counts, all relating to her conduct in the trial of Charles "Ebony" Horton, convicted of kidnapping and attempting to rape a child in 2000. The improprieties were found rooted in Lopez' bias against the prosecution; Lopez was cited for unprofessional conduct in protecting Horton, berating the prosecution and lying about the facts of the case to an SJC public information officer. For her part, Lopez said the charges were "unwarranted and unfounded," and that she would fight to have the CJC's findings proven incorrect.

• Gays can't get marriage license, judge rules. A Suffolk County judge Wednesday rejected a request from seven homosexual couples that he order the Department of Public Health to issue them marriage licenses. The couples vowed to pursue the case to the Supreme Judicial Court.

• State legislator wins confirmation to Waltham court. David Donnelly, the House chairman of the Judiciary Committee will serve on the Waltham District Court; his aides said they did not know when he would step down from the House, and he declined to be interviewed. Mary-Ellen Manning, D-Peabody, the "no" vote in the 6-1 confirmation tally, said she opposed Donnelly's confirmation because he did not step down from his House seat while a judicial candidate. But Marilyn Petitto Devaney, D-Watertown, who presided over Donnelly's interview, said he'll be one of the best confirmations ever by the council.

• Massport bond rating cut. Fitch Ratings Service said the Massachusetts Port Authority has suffered from a drop in business that hasn't rebounded quickly enough from the Sept. 11 decline in air travel. But Massport issued a statement saying it's happy to retain the highest bond rating in the airport category. Fitch cut Massport bonds to an AA- from an AA rating.

• Menino takes helm of US mayors' conference. Mayor Thomas Menino on Tuesday (May 7) became the fourth Bostonian to become president of the United States Conference of Mayors, following in the footsteps of past mayors James Curley, John Hynes and Raymond Flynn. Menino was scheduled to start his term at next month's annual conference in Madison, Wisconsin, but New Orleans Mayor Marc Morial stepped down early. Menino took the ceremonial gavel at a press conference attended by local officials, mayors from across the nation, Congressman and former Somerville Mayor Michael Capuano, Acting Governor Jane Swift, and political allies.

• Story of the wee: With the tax increase in place — and given approval in opinion polls — the House proceeded to put back half the $2 billion cut in its Ways and Means budget.

Craig Sandler writes for the Statehouse News Service.

Annual barbecue on Memorial Day

The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation invites everyone for hamburgers, hot dogs, soft drinks or coffee immediately following the Memorial Day Parade on May 27, at Bancroft Hall on Government Island.

The non-profit Lightkeepers Corporation was established in 1991 to renovate a former two-family lightkeepers' residence, no longer used as such because of automation of Minot's Light, and convert it into a function room for community use. The building is leased from the town but maintained and operated by the Lightkeepers Corporation.

The generosity of Cohasset residents and others provided the funds for renovation. Operating and maintenance expenses, and reserves for capital replacements or improvements, are recovered from rental of two apartments on the second floor, and from fees charged to non-residents for use of the function room facilities. Cohasset residents may use the facilities for a nominal fee, and non-profit organizations at no charge.

This will be the sixth year that CLC has hosted Memorial Day attendees in recognition of the generosity of our supporters and we expect to serve over 1000 people again.

World War I Memorial to be ready for parade

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

In what has been an exhausting process, the newest memorial at Veterans' Park at the harbor, honoring those in town who served in World War I, should be finished by Memorial Day.

Brendan St. John, a local stonemason, has been involved with the project for about two years now. While the memorial was originally supposed to be a fairly routine project, it quickly turned into a difficult one.

While drafting the plans a mistake was made in the dimensions of the plaques which are inscribed with the names of those who served. Because it took months to get the granite plates, the problem was not realized until a few weeks ago.

When the plaques finally arrived, St. John noticed they seemed to be quite a bit narrower and taller than those installed in the other memorial in the park that honors WW II veterans.

"All of the sudden I realized something was wrong," he said. "But we had to find a way to work around it."

"It's a wonderful dedication to the veterans who have served from this town."

— Town Manager Mark Haddad

In order to keep the symmetry of the area, it was necessary to return the five plaques, have them re-sized and re-engraved. Because of the problems with fitting the same number of names on a shorter plaque, it was necessary to add two more of them bringing the total to seven.

However, while this may seem like a solution it only created more problems. Having seven plaques made the memorial look out of sync with the rest of the park, so St. John along with Veterans Memorial Committee member Glenn Pratt decided on a new plan of attack.

They decided to expand the memorial and ordered an additional six plaques. Five of them will honor those who fought in the Civil War, almost 200 Cohasset natives fought in this war, and one for those who served in the Mexican-American conflict. So from the original five plaques that were supposed to honor veterans of WW I, the memorial now includes 13 plaques in memory of three different wars.

"This way the park looks pleasing to the eye," Pratt said.

Because of the additional granite required for the project, the price for the memorial soared above what was originally needed. While the town hasn't contributed any money to the memorial to date, it has been entirely funded through private donations, the selectmen have asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to go before the Advisory Committee and request a reserve fund transfer. Haddad said he will ask the committee for approximately $10,000 for the project.

"It's well worth the money," Haddad said. "It's a wonderful dedication to the veterans who have served from this town."

St. John said this has been one of the hardest projects he's ever worked on.

"I would just lie awake at night thinking about the math," he said. "I was just trying to come up with a solution that would work and I think we did."

St. John added he will spend every waking hour at the park over the next two weeks to ensure it's done on time.

"It will be done on time," he said.

The Memorial Day parade will begin at 8 a.m. The first leg of the march takes veterans from the American Legion Post on Summer Street to the library where there will be buses available to board. Once on the buses, the group will begin a tour of the cemeteries in Cohasset, stopping at each one for a brief ceremony.

Pratt expects most people to join the parade at approximately 10:45 a.m. when the group heads back to the Music Circus before heading to the central cemetery on North Main Street. From there, the parade will head to the Common and then its final destination, Veterans' Park.

At around noon time, Vietnam veteran and Navy Seal Ted Macklin, will be giving a speech and then there will be a flag raising.

"It's should be a very fitting tribute to our veterans," Pratt said.

A new addition this year is there will be a military guard holding a vigil from sunset on Sunday until sunrise on Monday to honor the veterans.

Victories keep coming in different forms for boys and girls tennis teams

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

They may not do it in the same fashion, both the boys and girls varsity tennis teams continue to win.

The girls show the dominance they displayed last year en route to the South Sectional Semi-finals, destroying their weaker opponents, 5-0 or 4-1.

Meanwhile, the boys find themselves seeking out match after match with a 3-2 advantage, but a win is a win.

"The most difficult thing about tennis is making everyone think that it is a team sport," noted veteran girls coach Sarah Meehan. "Everyone is just so ready, getting themselves geared up."

Both teams took down Harwich this week, the boys 3-2 and the girls 4-1, topping squads that were both playoff contenders a year ago.

For the girls, the squad overcame an illness to their normal third singles player, sophomore Emily Sullivan, to take the win handily. Sophomore Courtney Caron stepped in for Sullivan to win the first set quickly, 6-2.

Down 1-4 in the second set, she took the deciding point in the match by coming back to win it 6-4.

Elizabeth Stone gave up only her third game of the year, cruising at second singles, 6-0, 6-1. With the exception of a 6-2, 6-0 victory over Abington, Stone has blanked every other opponent she has faced this year, including the individual tournament.

The first doubles team of Julie Shea and Kate Englander, still undefeated as a pair, quickly took their point with a 6-2, 6-1 win. At second doubles, usually where Caron would be playing with senior captain Kelly Stone, Nicole Needle and Corey Evans recovered from a tough first set to take the match, 6-4, 6-0.

Christine Pearson, the 14-4 ace of Harwich's staff, topped junior captain Lindsay Grossman in a three-set dogfight, 2-6, 6-4, 6-2.

On the boys side, Cohasset took three three-set wins to edge out the Harwich squad that eliminated the Skippers in the first round of last year's state tourney.

Sophomore Tim Anton won a bizarre match of heavy-hitters, 7-5, 0-6, 6-1 over Harwich captain Justin Turco. Turco, whose extremely strong first serve is his strength, was unable to overpower the very consistent Anton, who played well despite a nagging wrist injury.

Junior Ross Lieb-Lappen and sophomore Andrew Wise won another strange score, losing 4-6 in the first set at second doubles before racing to a 6-0, 6-0 victory.

Sophomore Craig Druscella, who is now 10-1 in the SSL, losing only to All-Scholastic power

Cohasset boys track team rolls to 12th consecutive league win

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset boys track team has put together a combined 12-0 record between last year's SSL Championship campaign and this year's undefeated showing. However, the next few weeks hold the biggest challenges this team has seen.

They are 5- 0 within the league this year, including a thrilling win over Carver by seven points. Within a week, the Skippers faced Abington, the only team besides Cohasset to beat Carver last year (the meet was Wednesday and too late for this printing) and on Monday will go head-to-head with Mashpee, the new SSL member who won the Team Class D Championships last year.

At the time of this writing, Cohasset is the only undefeated team in the league this year, but coach Al LaFountain knows that with this stretch ahead, there is no room for complacency.

"Anybody can beat anybody in this league," he noted, pointing to the fact that Abington, Carver, Norton and Mashpee all lost within the SSL in the first two weeks of the season. "There is definitely a target on our back."

Past the league match-ups, the Skippers have been preparing for the Individual meets up ahead, first Principles this Saturday, and then the Class D States on May 25th. Despite Cohasset's small team, a startling number have qualified in at least one event.

Senior captain Tim Baird, who has been known for winning the mile and two mile all through high school, transitioned very well into the 800 meters to qualify for States. Breaking two minutes at the Weston Twilight meet, Baird is now considered among the elite middle-sprinters in Massachusetts.

Senior captain Pete Maitland hopes to make his return as the only athlete from last year's team to go to the New England competition, where he finished 17th in the javelin. His personal best remains at 179-feet-3 inches, but LaFountain is confident that, given the right competition to push him, Maitland can top 185-feet.

Senior captain Liam Martin, who has been unable to get his running events on track due to the knee injury he suffered in the fall football season, has continued to blossom in the high jump. With a high of 6-feet-3, good enough to win the South Shore League this year ahead of second place finisher, Maitland, Martin would appear to have a legitimate shot of placing at States.

Senior Dan Kinchla qualified in the mile this year with a run of 4:45. Like Maitland, LaFountain feels confident that Kinchla could improve upon his best time under

Laxers still seek 10th victory after back-to-back losses to Duxbury, Nantucket

Cohasset boys varsity lacrosse continued to find the going tough in the month of May, falling to non-league foe Nantucket, 9-8, on Saturday afternoon, and losing to number-one-ranked Duxbury on Monday. The Skippers now stand at 10-5 on the season, with nine victories against MIAA opponents. Cohasset needs a 10th MIAA win to qualify for the Div. 2 state championships for the second consecutive year.

Against Duxbury, the top-ranked team in the state and 27th in the country, the Skippers – on the road for the ninth time in 15 games and the third contest in a row – fought through hurricane-like conditions valiantly, tying the Dragons at the end of one period, 1-1 on Curt Kahn's goal off a Paul Previte feed.

With junior defensemen Nick Spirito and Tom Anderson controlling the high-powered Duxbury offense, and senior goalie Kyle Weber (20 saves for the day) stopping several point-blank shots, the game stayed close at halftime, with the Skippers trailing 7-2. But seconds before the first-half horn sounded, Duxbury all-American attackman John Sisto took a diving shot that Weber got a piece of. On Sisto's follow-through, however, the Duxbury player's helmet collided with Spirito's knee, and the Cohasset Bay State Games gold medalist and junior captain never returned. Fortunately, the injury proved to be a bruise, and Spirito was expected to be ready for the next game.

In the fourth quarter, with the score 14-5, Cohasset cleared its bench, allowing everyone who'd made the trip to see action.

Cohasset scorers were led by Kahn, with a pair of goals, and Previte, with a goal and two assists. Juniors Matt Davis and Robert Hickey each had single tallies.

On Saturday, a beautiful island day and a boat trip were spoiled by

CHS baseball team exacts revenge on Abington, Hillyer

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

This was their World Series.

In a season like this for the Cohasset High baseball team, Thursday's thrilling 9-8 win over South Shore League powerhouse Abington was just about as good as it gets.

The victory was the first for the young Skippers in SSL play this season and raised their overall record to 3-11. Obviously, post-season aspirations faded weeks ago, but this win went a long way towards easing that pain.

"The kids were really pumped about that game going in, so to win in the way we did against Hillyer just really meant a lot to the psyche of the kids," said coach Bob Knurek.

Hillyer, the Green Wave's super soph pitcher, spun a perfect game against the Skippers back on April 23, embarrassing the team with 13 strikeouts. Coach Knurek has been saying in recent weeks that he has seen some encouraging signs from Post-season surprises on tap in Marinerland?

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

Could the Scituate High baseball team be headed for a little role reversal this spring?

Last year, as many may recall, the Sailors made a remarkable run, ripping off 11 consecutive wins to start the season before finishing 17-3. That effort earned the third seed in the Div. 2 south sectionals, where the Sailors were quickly dispatched, "upset" by 14th-seeded Coyle Cassidy in the first round, 6-4.

The quotation marks adorning the word "upset" are there, because, in fact, this result wasn't really all that surprising. Though the C.C. Warriors barely squeaked into the post-season last spring with a 10-10 record, several of their losses came against the acknowledged baseball mettle of Eastern Mass , including Taunton, Durfee and eventual state champion B.C. High. Scituate, conversely, was beating up on a young and depleted Patriot League, and some even weaker non-league competition. In short, Coyle Cassidy was a lot more "battle tested" when last year's post-season rolled around.

Scituate coach Kevin Greer swore moments after the final out in that first-round tourney loss that he would line up a tougher slate in the spring of 2002, and the fifth-year coach made good on that promise, arranging two games each against non-league powerhouses Dedham (of the perennially stacked Bay State League) and Marshfield (currently 14-0 and running away with the Old Colony League). The two games against Marshfield became three when the two teams met in the championship game of the Brian F. O'Donnell Memorial Tournament, the Sailors losing all three times to their bigger neighbors to the south by a combined total of just four runs.

And just as the competitiveness of the non-league portion of the schedule has been upped considerably, the Patriot League slate also saw a noteworthy upgrading. Middleboro, the team that shared the Patriot League crown with the Sailors last season, returned a good portion of its talent, as did Hingham and East Bridgewater. Additionally, realignment saw weaker sisters Mashpee and Randolph replaced with perennial contenders Hanover and Duxbury.

All things considered, it was not all that surprising to see the Scituate baseball squad heading in to Wednesday's hosting of Hingham sporting a 9-8 record, still needing one win in its last three games just to qualify for the post-season.

Assuming, as I am, the Sailors get that essential win — whether it came yesterday, or comes Monday at Norwell or next Wednesday at home against Dedham, three teams they beat the first time around — they could be in good shape to pull off the same kind of "upset" Coyle Cassidy did a year ago.

There are a few reasons for this bold prediction, but numero uno, no doubt about it, is what appears could be a return to form of Jesse Cole. The Scituate High senior was the Patriot League's runaway MVP selection last spring, leading the league in both batting average (.500) and pitching (an 0.84 ERA). This spring, however, Cole, who has already agreed to a full Div. 1 baseball scholarship from Wofford College in South Carolina, has gone through some surprising struggles on both sides of home plate. Of course, his low number of wins on the mound can be attributed somewhat to shaky defense behind him, but he's still put himself in a few jams the likes of which Scituate fans had rarely seen the previous few seasons.

Over the last few outings, however, there have been signs that Cole may finally be shaking free of his funk – the most encouraging being his complete game shutout against East Bridgewater last Wednesday, a dominating performance that saw him strike out nine, while allowing just three hits and one walk.

Cole should have gotten the call yesterday against Hingham, and will likely get the start in the regular season finale next Wednesday vs. Dedham, with coach Greer hopeful his ace will build on his best mound performance of the season. Jesse has also had a few multi-hit games recently, raising hopes on that front as well.

If Cole is indeed back on track, this could legitimately give the Sailors one of the best one-two pitching punches in the Div. 2 state tourney — in which two pitchers can often be enough — and possibly one of the top offensive combos as well.

Teammate Jason Connelly might just be the leading candidate to succeed Jesse as MVP this year. The senior, who will also play college baseball next year (at Western New England College) is currently leading the PL in hitting (.525), home runs (four) and RBIs (26). He also has a no-hitter and a two-hitter to his credit on the mound.

What is more, the Sailors have seemingly made some important strides both offensively and defensively in recent weeks. First year starters Joe Duggan and Mike Gulinello have settled in at second base and third base, respectively, and are now providing some steady pop out of the fourth and fifth spots in the order behind ultra-consistent leadoff man Greg Levin, Cole and Connelly. Levin, the team's center fielder, is just as steady in the field as at the plate, while slick fielding Cole and Connelly are the leaders of the infield when the other is pitching, sharing the all important shortstop duties.

Additionally, first baseman Mike Barry seems to be finding his hitting eye and junior designated hitter/outfielder Kyle Simpson has clearly emerged from a pack of players who battled through the first half of the season to seize a spot in the middle of the order as a prime RBI producer.

Speaking of teams that could surprise in the post-season, look out for:

The Silver Lake baseball team

Like the Scituate girls, the SL baseball team finished just one win shy of post-season qualification last spring. Unlike, the Scituate girls and Norwell boys, however, the Lakers graduated a ton of talent — 13 players in all. Not surprisingly, not much was expected on the diamond this spring at Silver Lake with a first-year head coach in Steve Giambanco coming aboard. However, the Lakers entered this week of action needing just two wins in the six games they've got left to make it to the post-season for the first time in three seasons.

Needless to say, a lot of the talent from last year's junior varsity team has come of age quickly, with shortstop Ryan Nicotri, first baseman/catcher Bobby Malone, outfielder Ryan Flaherty and pitcher Nick Botelho leading that charge.

A couple have returning stalwarts have also come up big, most notably Griff Benelli, who has bounced back from man up and down junior campaign on the mound to emerge as a genuine Most Valuable Player candidate in the Old Colony League. The senior has been the winning pitcher in all but two of the Lakers' victories to date, compiling a 6-1 record and a league best 0.57 earned run average.

The Cohasset boys tennis team

It was thought this season would be a particularly bleak one for the team already long overshadowed by a girls program that is annually considered among the area's elite, what with several stalwarts from the team who barely qualified for post-season play a year ago lost to graduation. This week of action got underway, however, with the Skippers keeping their head above .500 (5-4), winners of three of their last four matches. Juniors Dave Ingber, Ross Lieb-Lappen and Tim Anton have all emerged in their first season of regular singles play to post better than .500 records to help lead the young Skippers to the cusp of a tourney berth.

Cohasset boys track team

Of course, it's something of a surprise any time a team from tiny Cohasset High does much of note against competition from the much larger schools of the South Shore League (in terms of student population that is). So when a Skippers team is able to sustain a level of dominance over a few seasons, it makes for a great story.

This is a great story. Despite losing several top athletes to gradation, including two-time Class D state 200-meter champion Brian Krupczak, the Cohasset High male tracksters (7-0) will be looking to wrap up their second consecutive unbeaten season on Wednesday when they meet Abington (4-2).

Seven Skippers ran away with first-place wins at last Tuesday's South Shore League meet, including a pair of meet record-setting performances from Pete Maitland (javelin) and Tim Baird (800 meters). Maitland and Baird are just two of the multi-sport stars at Cohasset High who have been turning out the last few springs to run track. Others include Dan Kinchla (hockey and soccer standout), Ian Kidder (soccer and basketball), Jared Krupczak (football and basketball), and Liam Martin (football and basketball) – who also took first-place finishes at Tuesday's leaguewide meet.

Perhaps the most amazing aspect of the success the team has had is that Cohasset High, unlike all of the other SSL schools, offers no fall or winter track program. Thus, the Skippers under veteran coach Al LaFontain (who, unlike other SSL track mentors) coaches both the boys and girls are forced to hit the ground running (literally and figuratively) every March.

his young charges since that game, and on Thursday they finally netted something to back up their coach's assertion.

The host Skippers rallied for two runs in the bottom of the seventh off Hillyer, who had come on in relief of starter Mike Miller in the previous inning.

Mike Snowdale, who went the distance on the mound to earn a win, helped his own cause by leading off the seventh with a clean single off Hillyer. Snowdale moved to second on a passed ball then to third on Tim Straughn's infield single. Clean up man Louis Blanco then brought home Snowdale with an infield fielders choice to tie the game at 8-all.

An out later, senior Matt Ogrodnick delivered a walk-off double, plating Blanco with the game winner.

"We're such a young team, and I think this win does a lot for all of our kids, especially the younger ones," said Knurek, who regularly trots out two freshmen and six or seven sophomores. "The younger guys have really made a lot of progress. The freshman are now playing like sophomores and the sophomores like juniors. The kind of experience they're getting now will obviously help us long term."

Abington led 6-2 after three innings, with two Cohasset errors leading to four unearned runs against Snowdale, as the Skippers appeared to be following an all too familiar story line.

It was Ogrodnick again who delivered a big two run triple to right during the Skippers five run uprising in the fifth inning, putting the hosts in front for the first time on the afternoon. Leading hitter Tim Straughn, the team's other senior, also finished 2-for-3 with a couple of runs scored.

Miller put Abington back up in the sixth with a run scoring single, but that only served to set the stage for Cohasset's game winning rally.

The return to the lineup of Ogrodnick, who missed the first few weeks of action after suffering a concussion, has really helped stabilize the team, in coach Knurek's opinion.

"Matt's one of only two seniors on the team, and now that we've got his experience back and he's swinging the bat well, we've finally got the team on the field I envisioned way back before the season started," said Knurek.

Of course, in the coach's estimation, that vision was also delayed by the lack of outdoor pre-season and early season practice time, as rain and the poor drainage conditions at Milliken Field forced the team indoors for much of April.

"There's no substitute for getting on the field and swinging at live pitching and fielding live grounders and flies," said Knurek. "Unfortunately, we didn't have that, and I think that delayed the development of a lot of our players, the younger ones and the veterans.

"We've got a lot of guys who are starting to swing the bats well now, though. Unfortunately, it's too late to make a push (for the playoffs) this year, but it's a good confidence boost for the kids, and it would be nice to see the seniors go out with a few more wins."

Among the players who are now swinging the bat closer to the way Knurek figured they would all season are sophomore leadoff man Mike Dooley and senior Tim Straughn, the team's defending batting champ and the third hitter in the order.

"Mike Dooley has really settled in to the leadoff role," reported Knurek. "He's become more selective at the plate, and he's working the count like you want your first hitter to do. He's also seeing the ball right now. I think he has like six doubles in the last four games alone. He's setting the table."

Senior captain Straughn has nudged his average back near the .400 mark. He had a couploe of hits I nSaturday's 11-3 loss to Nantucket, including his team best third home run of the year.

This game on the island was tied at 1-1 after four innings, with Straughn throwing well, but a couple of Cohasset errors in the fifth allowed four runs to cross, and then things completely fell apart in the home half of the sixth.

Baseball notes

The Skippers have six game remaining, and Knurek considers at least half of those "quite winnable the way we're playing now."

Monday's game with Carver was postponed, giving Cohasset two games now that need to be made up. The boys were scheduled to makeup a previous rainout with Norwell on Wednesday, which gave them three games in three days.

pressure situations. Senior Steve Laney has fought off a quadriceps injury to remain one of the premiere discus throwers on the South Shore.

Juniors Ian Kidder and Jared Krupczak, who both worked out extremely hard in the off-season, have impressed LaFountain with their breakout seasons.

Kidder moved away from his specialty last year, the 400, and qualified in the 200 this year. Also, a member of the State contending 4x100 team, Kidder has additionally qualified in both the triple jump and the javelin.

Krupczak, the lead leg on the 4x100 team, made it to States in the 100-meter sprint with a time of 11.3 seconds, qualifying by more than a half-second. Krupczak also has a strong chance to qualify in the long jump, needing to add only three inches to his personal best at Principles.

Should any or all of the qualifiers place high enough at States, they would advance to the All-State competition, held June 1st. New Englands would be held a week later, on the 8th.

"Anybody has the ability to make it that far," lauded coach LaFountain. "They all saw some of the pressure last year, and I think they are ready for it."

Sam Bitetti, knocked out junior captain David Ingber at first singles with a 10-8 tiebreaker.

Harwich then tied the match, 2-2, with a first doubles win over junior Scott Faber and sophomore Andrew Busk, leaving the much needed match for both teams up to third singles.

After struggling to win the first set, 7-5, sophomore Jesse Brewer lost the second set, 4-6. He then held serve all through the final frame, and broke his counterpart at a critical 4-4 score to take the decision 6-4.

The boys improved to 6-5 on the year, their first time over .500 after opening the season 0-3. The girls, who also dropped their first two decisions, ran their record to 9-2.

Both teams had very important matches scheduled Wednesday, the boys in Harwich and the girls home against Norwell to decide the SSL Championship.

Tennis Notes

This past weekend, the girls team had the best showing as a team at the Individual Tournament of coach Meehan's 11 year tenure.

Both Grossman and Stone breezed through the first two rounds, to advance to the Sweet 16 next weekend, where they will face some of the top competition in Massachusetts. Sullivan had the tough luck of drawing Hingham's powerful number two player Jen Wasson in the opening round, but gave her a good run, losing 6-1, 6-4.

The first doubles team of Englander and Shea got on track to win in three sets, and advance to the next weekend's play, where they will face a strong second doubles team from Wellesley. Wellesley's number one duo, the top seeds in the tournament, barely held off a late run by Caron and Kelly Stone in the second round, 6-2, 6-4.

a determined Whalers squad that had circled the date on its calendar since the season started.

"This was the game we felt would make our season," said Nantucket assistant coach Steve Erisman. "We played as if our lives depended on it."

The intensity of the game was marked by an unusually high number of penalties – 15 for Nantucket, 12 for Cohasset – with neither team able to pull away from the other.

The hosts shut out the Skippers in the first quarter, but Cohasset rallied for a pair by senior attackman Paul Previte to tie the contest two minutes into the second period. The Whalers took another two-goal lead, and again the Skippers rallied, tying the game for a second time with two seconds left in the half, when Previte found classmate Eric Libby free on the crease.

Cohasset took the lead just 27 seconds into the third quarter, as senior Sean Chase came around from behind for his sixth goal of the season. But three consecutive goals by Whaler attackman Matt Erisman gave Nantucket a lead they'd never relinquish.

A two-goal flurry by Cohasset in the last two minutes closed the gap to one, but the Skippers were unable to collect a final score.

For Cohasset, Previte led the way with three goals and an assist. Libby had a pair of goals and an assist, while Matt Davis, Robert Hickey and Chase each had single tallies. Curt Kahn and Jason Moore each registered an assist. Kyle Weber had nine saves while allowing eight goals. Soph Nick Murphy, subbing for Weber when he received a penalty for not wearing his mouthpiece, let in one goal.

Cohasset was scheduled to host non-league foe Bourne today (Thursday) and travel to Pilgrim rival Marshfield on Friday. The Skippers' contest with Div 2 state champ Hingham has been rescheduled for Sunday night at Alumni Field.

Total team effort

Reinstitution of softball in Cohasset begins at all levels

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High softball program is hardly being put together in a vacuum.

When plans were made to reinstitute softball at the high school level this season, incoming coach Deb Bostwick talked as much about establishing a good feeder program as she did the prospects for her team that would compete in year one as a junior varsity program. And, as her team heads down the stretch in its inaugural campaign, the coach is happy to report good news on all fronts.

Bostwick is thrilled that travel all-star teams have been established by Cohasset Youth Baseball for summer play in the under-10, under 12 and under-14 divisions.

She is likewise pleased with what she's seen from the middle school program, which has played over .500 ball in its first season against some top competition.

And last but hardly least, the Cohasset High squad has won seven of 10 games competing against area junior varsity teams, and Bostwick reports that progress in virtually all important areas has been steady throughout the debut campaign. In short, with no seniors on the team, the coach says she is "looking forward to the jump to varsity competition next season."

"We're 100 percent better in so many areas than we were when the season started," said Bostwick, who played college softball at Keene State and previously coached 10 years at Duxbury High. "I think the girls who are here are feeling confident moving up next year, and they're excited. It's been a good year."

Despite the long list of positives, though, the coach still clearly has one hand pulled tight on the reins.

"It's going to be a big step up next year, and I hope none of the kids are thinking it's just going to be a continuation of this season," said Bostwick, who also coaches field hockey at Cohasset High, and teaches and coaches basketball at Carver High. "We're 7-3 right now, but we could be 3-7 next year. The important thing for us is that we stay patient."

The Lady Skippers have shown a penchant for offensive explosiveness this season, scoring in the high teens many times, and twice over 20 against Norwell. They have, however, struggled against hard throwing pitchers, such as Carver's JV fireballer, who recently held the Cohasset to just one run.

"That's our Achilles heel right now," conceded the coach. "We aren't adjusting to the hard throwers, and that's what we'll probably see most times out next year. Still, we're getting there. We just have to keep working on it."

If the girls can progress on that front with the same alacrity they have defensively and on the basepaths, they should be all right.

"We're making plays in the field consistently now that we weren't really making at all at the beginning of the year," reported the coach. "Our outfielders are moving, and understanding their backup responsibilities. The balls aren't getting by them nearly as much these days and when they do our relays are 100 percent better. We're actually gunning people out from the outfield quite a bit now."

The coach then added with a smile: "And we're not saying excuse me on the base paths anymore. We're running hard and sliding hard. We save the 'excuse mes' for after the game."

Bostwick has also developed quite a bit of defensive flexibility. She's been moving her outfielders around, giving them an inning here and there at third base and a few other positions, explaining "it never hurts to develop some depth."

For the most part, Bostwick has gone with an infield of Andrea Keating at first, Kaitlin Gontarz at second, Rachel Doyle at third, Danielle Pinkus at short, Casey Anderson behind the plate and junior Heather Peraino pitching. Keating, who moved to Cohasset from Marshfield this year, has also seen some time on the mound, with Peraino swapping spots when that happens.

Cecilia Chapman, Molly Liddell, Allison Dean, Molly Ordnik, Caitlin Condon and newcomer Marissa Mello have all seen time in the outfield. Mello made a spectacular catch in a game last week at Abington that basically preserved a win for the Skippers.

The Lady Skippers had five games remaining on the season at the time of this writing, beginning with yesterday's scheduled hosting of Carver. They then host Hull today (3:30) and Scituate on Saturday. They'll finish up with two road tilts, traveling to Rockland on Monday and then to Sacred Heart next Thursday for the season finale.

"Mouth of the South" honored

WATD's Wilhelm feted for 25 years of broadcasting local sports

By Mike Hardman
CNC STAFF WRITER

For 25 years, Bill Wilhelm has talked about other people, but the table was turned on him Saturday night.

In honor of his 25 years of broadcasting local sports, friends and colleagues gathered at Holy Family Church in Duxbury to recognize the voice of the South Shore in dinner to raise money for the WATD-Bill Wilhelm Scholarship Fund.

Wilhelm, a Duxbury resident, was overwhelmed by the turnout of more than 250 people to recognized his efforts.

"I'm blown away by all of this," he said. "It's been a great ride.

"A lesson I learned a long time ago was that we're not great, but the games are great."

Well, he's being modest about his achievements as a broadcaster. Wilhelm has built a reputation as a top play-by-play broadcaster with numerous Associated Press awards to his credit.

His friends, however, were more than willing to recognize Wilhelm for his contributions to sports on the South Shore.

"He could be a broadcaster on the collegiate or professional level," said Marshfield's Don Gibson, one of the hosts of WATD's Sports Exchange, and the featured speaker at the dinner, "but he chooses to spend his time with high school athletes.

"Where are we ever going to find a person to donate the time he has to the athletes of the South Shore?"

Fortunately, Wilhelm doesn't plan on retiring. He joked that when the radio station was airing promos about the night that people wondered whether something bad had happened to him.

For the last 25 years, it's all been good for him. Wilhelm has broadcasted local high school football, soccer and basketball games, while also hosting the Sports Exchange on Sunday nights.

"If this was the movie it would be "It's a Wonderful Life" and I would be George Bailey," he said. "It's been great."

Like Bailey, played by Jimmy Stewart in the 1946 Frank Capra classic, Wilhelm values the friendships he has made over the years.

"These are all great people to be involved with," he said.

When WATD radio received its license 25 years ago this month, Wilhelm, who grew up in New Jersey and attended Kent State in Ohio, went to station owner Ed Perry to pitch the idea of sports on the radio.

"What did I need a sports director for?" recalled Perry. "He kept coming to my house and wouldn't leave. Finally, I felt worn down."

With a tentative OK from Perry in the fall of 1977, Wilhelm broadcasted the Duxbury High games into a tape recorder to show the station owner what the games were going to sound like.

"I prayed for rain every Saturday, while they were sitting in the bleachers," recalled Perry with a laugh. "I knew this was going to cost me money."

The first game that year was the Hull-Ashland Super Bowl game and Wilhelm's career was off and running.

"It was about 10 or 15 years before I bought into what it meant," said Perry with a smile. "Bill has built a great kingdom and that is totally out of control.

"Bill is what high school sports is all about. I'm in awe of what Bill has accomplished."

Bill Wilhelm is celebrating a quarter century of broadcasting.

Wilhelm is quick to credit everyone who has worked for him over the year. One of those people is Arthur Boyle, a Pembroke selectman. Boyle is a co-host on the Sports Exchange and broadcasts local high school games. He was the chief organizer of the scholarship dinner.

"When I met him, within 15 minutes I knew I had to get this guy involved," said Wilhelm of Boyle.

In his speech, Boyle talked about the professional, caring standard Wilhelm has established.

John Creed started with Wilhelm in 1978 and has been with him since on a weekly basis. Creed also fills in for his friend on the daily morning sports broadcasts.

"He called me up when the (Boston) Celtics were in the playoffs," said Creed, a longtime employee of the Celtics. "Bill wanted me to talk about the team and we've been doing it ever since.

"The greatest benefit for me is that I have a friend (in Wilhelm.)"

Gibson started out listening to Wilhelm do the morning sports broadcasts where he highlights the following days local results.

When his son, Ted, was playing for the 1998 state champion Marshfield High boys soccer team, Gibson joined the broadcast booth as color man along with Duxbury High head coach Foster Cass. Gibson now also does football and appears on the Sport Exchange.

"He's the glue that binds it all together," said Gibson. "The person who has presented this has been the constant thing."

Gibson also spoke about Wilhelm's ability to make those who he is interviewing feel at ease and that he cares about them.

That was a theme that was echoed by all of the speakers during the course of the evening.

Bridgewater-Raynham head football coach Dan Buron presented Wilhelm with a plaque from all of the coaches in the Old Colony League to honor his accomplishments. Buron said Wilhelm is also asking him about players who were on the team six or seven years ago to find out how they are doing.

"One thing about Bill is that he cares about the student-athletes on the South Shore," said Buron. "It's truly unbelievable."

Wilhelm and his wife, Marsha, received Duxbury High soccer jerseys with the No. 1 and No. 1 A from interim athletic director Ron McCarthy. He also received a new Pembroke Pioneers jersey with the No. 25 for his years of service from Pembroke selectman Bill Cullity and a shirt and hat from the new baseball team, the Brockton Rox. State Representative Vinny DeMacedo presented him with a plaque from the State House.

Besides his broadcasting work, Wilhelm is also the junior varsity boys soccer coach at Duxbury High where he has been involved in the program for 27 years and had a record of 369-23-35.

"Bill is a fellow coach," said Wilhelm's friend, former Norwell High athletic director and football coach Dave Walsh. "When you do the math, he's won 95 percent of his game. He's also broadcasted over a 1,000 games."

Wilhelm said he received a phone call from the Duxbury High athletic department asking him what time practice was before he even took the job.

"I never even applied for the job," said Wilhelm. "I called Frosty (Cass) and he said to get a whistle, arrive at 2:30 p.m. and look like a coach. It's been a fun ride for me."

Wilhelm said he frequently tells Marsha, who keeps everything together, that "this year" is going to be his last of coaching, but once fall rolls around, he's back on the sideline, working with kids.

And he'll be back in the broadcast booth again as usual.

" This is great," said Wilhelm. "The people I work with make it great. You get to see great games all the time. Every Friday night, there are great games to go to. You get to go to Rockland and have great hot dogs."

Like George Bailey, Wilhelm has found the best place to be is where his friends are.

(Mike Hardman is also a co-host of WATD's Sports Exchange.)

A mixed bag for Mother's Day

Cohasset youth laxers net two wins, three losses and two ties

Mother's Day saw Cohasset Youth Lacrosse taking all of its teams — and most of the players' Moms — on the road, playing seven games in three different towns to mixed results.

The Cohasset 10-U (3rd & 4th grade) White team took its unblemished record to Duxbury, where it faced a 4-1 Duxbury Gold squad.

The outcome was the team's best game of the season, featuring a dominant defensive performance from the midfielders, defensemen and goalies Ian Quinlan and Kevin O'Connell. John Kearney and Brendan Doonan handled the scoring, each netting three goals, as Cohasset raced to a 6-0 halftime lead.

Brendan Horrigan added his first goal of the season, followed by Chris Walsh as the lead expanded to 8-0 after three. In the fourth quarter, Taylor McQuade moved from defense to attack and took advantage, scoring two goals to make the final 10-0.

The unbeaten Cohasset 12-U (5th and 6th grade) White team played next in Duxbury, where it doubled up a well-respected Duxbury Green team by a final of 12-6

Duxbury jumped out to an early lead, but two early saves from Wes Ulmer — who had 10 stops on the day — kept Duxbury in check until Peter Oswald could knot things up. Mark Flibotte and Peter Ernst then staked Cohasset to a 3-1 lead at the end of the first quarter.

Cohasset began to dominate play in all three areas of the field during the second quarter. Strong defense led by Jonny Wade, Kyle Pinkus, Frank Wheelwright and James Riechardt limited Duxbury to just one goal for the quarter, allowing Cohasset to stretch its lead to 6-2 behind goals from Oswald, Flibotte and Charlie Czerkawski, who converted a feed from Flibotte.

Attackman T.J. Kennedy finished a feed from Oswald before Oswald and Flibotte each netted their third of the day, stretching the lead to 9-4 entering the final stanza. The fourth quarter saw some fine back and forth play between the two teams with Oswald netting his fourth goal on a nice fast-break feed from midfielder Evan Deutsch, Kennedy scoring his second on a pass from Oswald and Oswald closing out the day by converting Kyle Pinkus' end-to-end rush.

The 14-U (7th and 8th grade) boys played twice last week, first squaring off on Tuesday, May 7 against Marshfield in a game that was never in doubt. Led by the hitting of Chris Davis, the defense of Jared Dick, Mike Barnes, Hunter Sease and Robert Silvia, Cohasset shut out Marshfield 12-0.

Corey Chase led the scoring with three goals and two assists. Trevor Brady, Mike Pecca and Ryan Kucinski each added two goals — Brady's first on the season after returning from injury — while Aidan Buick posted a goal and an assist. Davis and Dan Trendowicz added single goals, while Jared Kinch and Corbin Faber each picked up an assist.

The challenge was much bigger on Sunday the 12th, as the team traveled to Duxbury. There, the team jumped out to a quick lead, with the first goal coming on a great feed from Mike Bunstein to Dan Trendowicz. Aidan Buick intercepted a clearing pass for a quick score. Trendowicz closed out the first-half scoring, and a defense led by Mike Barnes, Jeff Brown and goalie Ben Libby limited Duxbury to two goals.

The defense came out strong in the second half, led by , including several key stops by Libby, including one stuff right on the crease. Jared Kinch increased the lead to 4-2, converting a loose ball in front of the Duxbury crease, before Duxbury came back with two scores to knot things up.

Mike Martone gave Cohasset the lead again, and a Bunstein-to-Corey Chase-to-Buick made it a two goal margin, only to see Duxbury tie the score just before the end of regulation. From there, the two teams played a scoreless overtime period and called it a day, with a 6-6- tie and a promise to try to schedule an additional contest before the season ends in June. With the tie, the 14-U boys record moved to 5-0-1 on the season.

The boys teams that didn't go to Duxbury were in Scituate, where the 10-U Blue team opened the day with a tie and the 12-U Blue team lost for the first time all year in a thriller.

The 10-U Blue team played a technically solid game at both ends of the field, winning the majority of face-offs and controlling the groundballs. Noteworthy midfield performances included Andrew Whitney on ground balls, Alex Kinnealey starting a fast break, while Chris Brown, Will Lynner and Sam Leahy were strong in the defensive end. The second half saw Cohasset move its defenders to attack and midfield — and move some of its offensive players to the defensive zone — as Cohasset stayed in the game while giving its players a chance to try out new things during a close game.

Austin Meyers opened the scoring on a feed from Jake Wheelwright. After Scituate tied the score, Meyers fed Dean Driscoll to recapture the lead. Another Scituate goal was answered by a Justin Yeager-from-Conor Queenan connection, and the first period ended with Cohasset holding a 3-2 lead. A Max Shipp goal gave Cohasset a 4-2 halftime lead.

Scituate opened the second-half scoring, only to be answered by a by Driscoll converting a feed from Shipp. Scituate closed the gap to 5-4 before Wheelwright answered to close the third- quarter at 6-4. In the fourth quarter, Scituate tied the game, which ended in a 6-6 deadlock.

In the 12-U game, Scituate came out aggressively and dominated the action, keeping possession for most of the first period and jumping out to a 3-0 lead by the end of the first quarter. A goaltending change and two quick goals by Chris Rose and Mike Grimm helped to narrow the gap. Logan Chase made several key saves to keep things close, and the two teams traded goals — with Grimm netting his second for Cohasset — to go to the half with Scituate leading 4-3.

As the rain continued to come down, the Cohasset team came out tough in the second half on the strong midfield play of Matt Burgess and Chris Mills who dominated the face-offs, as well as Justin Connors, Nathan Porter and Andrew Smith, who began to dominate ground balls and possessions. Alex Shipp answered a Scituate goal by converting a behind-the-cage feed from Chris Rose. After another Scituate score, Cohasset's Chris Mills won the face-off, drove to the cage, and dished off to Grimm to make it a one-goal game again. Aggressive defensive play by Mike Bilodeau, Justin Hollis, and Sam DeGiacomo stopped several Scituate fast breaks and Chase — who ended the day with 12 saves — helped keep the margin there as the game went into the final period with Scituate up 6-5.

Cohasset evened the score on Grimm's fourth goal of the day off of a laser-like pass from Teddy Galligan. Scituate regained the lead before Rose snuck around from behind the cage and rifled the ball into the net from a seemingly impossible angle with two minutes left to play. But a Cohasset penalty gave Scituate an extra-man opportunity, which they converted; from there, they desperately held on as Cohasset couldn't capitalize on its final scoring chances to let Scituate slip away by a final of 8-7.

Both girls teams fall

The Cohasset girls youth teams spent Mother's Day battling the cold, rain, officiating and the girls of Braintree. Unfortunately, all of those elements got the best of the Cohasset girls on the day, as both teams fell victim to close losses.

At the 12-U level, Braintree jumped out to a quick two-goal lead before Gabriella Flibotte single-handedly tied the score. Madeline Leahy then converted a feed from Rebecca Dickinson — the first points of the season for both girls — to give Cohasset a 3-2 lead. Maura Barnes then added a goal — after another Cohasset score was waved off by the game official — before Braintree rallied to make the score 4-3 at the half.

Braintree tied the score quickly in the second half, then took the lead with three more scores, all while Cohasset had two more goals disallowed. Barnes and Flibotte scored to get Cohasset to within one, but the girls couldn't close finish their scoring chances and wound up on the short end of a 7-6 final score. Thomson Jaffe made four saves in the Cohasset net.

The 14-U team met up with a shorthanded Braintree squad, in a back-and-forth game that, again, saw too many missed opportunities. Aisling Guinee played a brilliant game in the net with 12 saves, five of them coming in the very early stages of the game to keep Braintree from getting a hot start. Braintree's one first-half goal was answered by Kathryn Evans' first goal of the season.

Cohasset took the lead early in the second half as Lisa Spirito finished a feed from Kaleigh Swain, but Braintree was able to break back quickly for two scores, and then slowly padded its lead to 5-2 despite Cohasset dominating play in its offensive zones and through the midfield. Spirito scored again with several minutes left and Cohasset continued to control the action, but couldn't find the net again, falling by a final score of 5-3.

More room for music at South Shore Conservatory

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The brilliant sunshine on a beautiful spring morning provided just the right setting for South Shore Conservatory trustees and staff as they announced the 30-year-old organization will be able to bring more music and performing arts into the lives of area residents.

The upbeat mood at the press conference on the pristine grounds of the conservatory last Friday — called to unveil an ambitious $3.5 million capital campaign — was buoyed even more by the generosity of another South Shore-based, music-focused organization.

South Shore Playhouse Associates, which supports other non-profit organizations involved in the arts, recreation and education, provided the conservatory capital campaign with a big boost to the tune of $250,000. The Playhouse Associates is the parent of the Music Circus in Cohasset and Cape Cod Melody Tent in Hyannis.

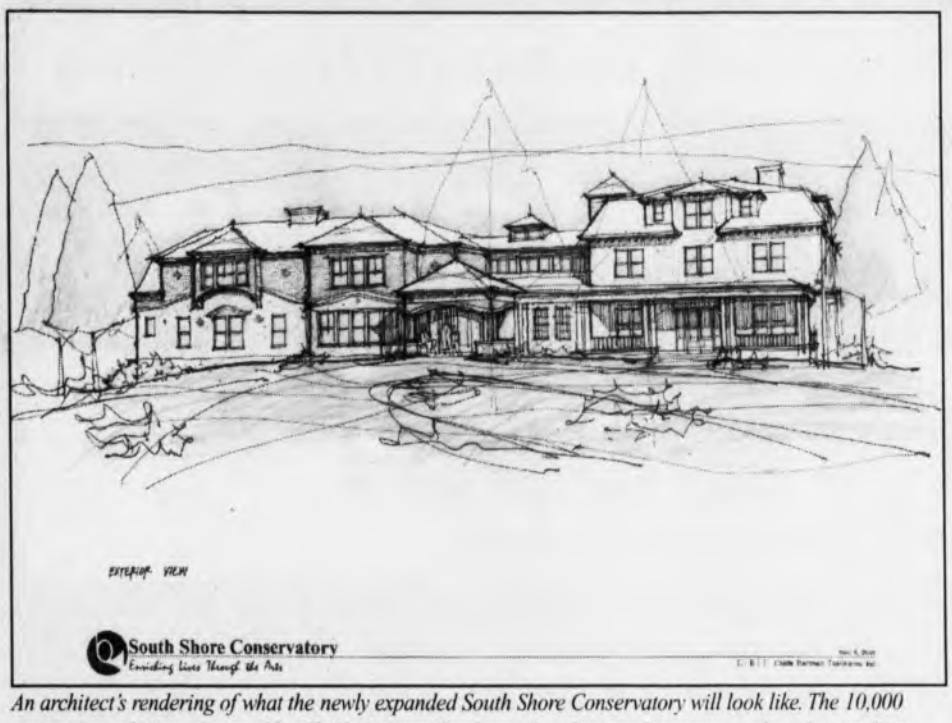
"We are proud to be able to participate in this most noteworthy endeavor."
— Bruce Cameron, South Shore Playhouse Associates

The expansion will double the size of the existing building by adding nine teaching studios, three large classrooms, professional gallery space. The project will allow the Conservatory, whose enrollments have more than doubled in the past 10 years, to continue to grow.

"Since we became aware of the Conservatory's plans for the expansion of the Hingham facility, we have been extremely enthusiastic and are proud to be able to participate in this most noteworthy endeavor," said Bruce Cameron, president of the South Shore Playhouse Associates.

Conservatory officials said $1.2 million has already been raised for the project, and they expect the ground to be broken next spring.

A young conservatory student practices on the cello.



An architect's rendering of what the newly expanded South Shore Conservatory will look like. The 10,000 square foot addition, designed by Childs Bertram Tseckares, Inc. features four piano studios, five teaching studios, three classrooms, a new reception area, an improved multi-purpose concert hall, improved waiting areas, exhibition gallery and public space.

Nelson Ross, president of the Conservatory's Board of Trustees, said he was happy to be able to go public with the Music Circus donation that arrived a year ago. He described the Music Circus as a "great partner" whose gift was the first major commitment to the project.

Capital campaign co-chairmen David Bryan and Barbara Clifford assisted Ross and Cameron in unveiling the architectural model.

Clifford said the project will bring the former military commandant's house where the Conservatory is housed from "a rather homely structure that we've grown to love" into the 21st century and beyond.

Bryan said if past history is a gauge, then the capital campaign would be a hit. He noted the Conservatory's Cox Hall, Carr Amphitheatre, and renovation of a former church in Duxbury into the Ellison Center for the Arts all were accomplished through funds raised locally.

Trumpet faculty members Greg Gettel and Dan Ladslow performed Igor Stravinsky's "Fanfare for a New Theatre" written for the opening of Lincoln Center in New York City to herald the unveiling of the architectural models.

Conservatory Director Jim Simpson provided an overview of Conservatory programs and how they add to the fabric of life on the South Shore, which he described as a "unique, wonderful place to bring up a family."

He explained the expansion would allow the Conservatory to continue its mission of providing "access to quality education in the arts."

The Conservatory offers more than 50 programs. The expansion will enable to the Conservatory to increase its arts-oriented preschool program. The new building will also provide space for an arts therapy program and more ensemble and performance opportunities, among other program improvements.

The South Shore Conservatory is the largest community music school in the state and provides education in the arts for students of all ages and abilities from 47 communities in instrumental and vocal music, drama, ballet, audio recording and preschool and music therapy programs.

What happened to the Proprietors of Little Harbor?

By Lou Eaton
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The third volume of the Cohasset Town History is scheduled to become available in June of this year and the Committee responsible for publication has thought to publish a few articles, courtesy of the Cohasset Mariner, about local history to stimulate interest in matters historical even though not related to the period of 1950 to 2000 covered by Volume III.

On Jan. 22, 1741, long before Cohasset became a separate town and Hingham was still part of Suffolk County, the 36 owners of a 104-acre tract of salt marsh and flats were authorized by one of His Majesty's Justices to form what we would now call a corporation. It was named "The Proprietors of the Meadows and Flats in the Little Harbor of Cohasset."

I read this information on one of Gilbert Tower's Historical Maps (this one including Little Harbor was made in January, 1962). After I subsequently moved, to our house on Little Harbor in 1967, after 22 years of living at the Cove, I have wondered what had happened to the Proprietors. Well, here is a summary of what happened For those who really don't care, the short answer is that the Great Storm of 1851, which carried away Minot's Lighthouse, washed out Cuba Dam and scoured out the flooded Little Harbor.

The Cohasset Meadows had originally been Common Property and cattle were herded to feed on hay crops upon the marshes, being driven from and to Hingham. However, in the late 1640's as described in pages 131 through 142 of Bigelow in his Narrative History of Cohasset, the division of the meadows into ownership of individual landowners was accomplished. Fences were built, probably of split rails to keep the cattle off when bay was growing and to keep the owners cattle in after the hay had been scythed. Over the years nearly half of the marshes originally laid out in private ownership had been drowned out by the subsidence of the coast and the rise in the sea level more than 350 years; so the shape of Little Harbor is today very different from when the Proprietors lands were laid out even without the 1851 storm.

In any event, the Proprietors apparently had the idea of trying to turn the salt marsh area into a fresh or brackish, water marsh by keeping the tidal flow out with a dam and thus furnish better bay for cattle and leaving only small channels (guzzles) for fresh storm water to flow out. So, a dam was built roughly where Cunningham's Bridge is now located between Great Neck and Beach Island in about 1765 called Cuba Dam. (Bigelow says it was probably named in honor of the capture of Havana in 1762 by a British fleet under Lord Albermarle.) The first method tried to keep the salt water tidal flow out was to have flapper valves in pipes through or around the dam. This would allow the water inside to flow out but stop the tidal salt water from flowing in, similar to the ones installed in front of Kimball's draining Jacobs Meadows.

However, this proved to be not good enough. It was decided to try to drain the high water inside off into the ocean by building a small canal or sluice through Sandy Beach to let the inside water out off of the grass-growing flats, since the natural outlet was pretty much shut off by Cuba Dam. They also dug a ditch about 10 feet wide up the harbor. Sounds like a good idea. But, what happened? According to Bigelow, "A violent storm of the heartless northeast variety, packed their sluice full of sand choking the whole scheme in the first winter" (page 331)

Nevertheless, under the leadership of well-to-do Elisha Doane and a Committee of Proprietors in 1804, a major variation of the sluicebox and canal system was constructed at very considerable expense alongside the Dam and water course arranged so that all of the water inside could be let out. As Bigelow says, " nearly 100 acres could be laid bare to the sun and thus transformed from a salt marsh to fresh meadows."

"The result of this dam was more than to reclaim the old marshes of 70 acres. Year by year, this land yielded a steady increase, and the bright green carpet was seen there gleaming in the sun every spring. It was nearly a half-century before the ocean was able to leap over the dam and destroy the meadows. This was done in the terrible storm of 1851, when the old iron lighthouse was carried away. When the salt sea filled Little Harbor at the time the canal was choked up so that no water could go to it was a most furious flood that had leaped over the dam, and it covered the flats so deeply that a rowboat could pass over the fences by the side of Jerusalem Road where that road crosses the flats north of Steep Rocks. It was a bothersome situation, and the town voted an appropriation of $500 to have the dam opened. Through the cut that was made in the dam the water flowed out with such a rush as to clear away its former passage to the sea, and never since that time has the ocean been forbidden its old course (page 333)

Some local boys parade across the flats during low tide in Little Harbor.

Gilbert Tower says on his 1962 Historical Map that the record took of the Proprietors is "in the Cohasset archives. He made an attempt to show the ownerships on his map but says "the result is disappointing because the old survey cannot be fitted onto this new map."

Nowadays, the ownership of the land adjacent to Little Harbor normally extends to the low tide line. In many instances, is well out on the flats but, any use of it, is severely restricted by the taking of environmental rights, recorded by the Commonwealth relating to Coastal Wetlands on our deeds of record including the Land Court under G.L. c. 130 Sec. 105 on Feb 4, 1974. In addition, there are permits required, from the State and licenses needed from our local zoning authorities for any structure below high water mark including seawalls, breakwaters, and docks.

High tide

High tide in Little Harbor is almost an hour and a half after the outside high water time shown in the Old Farmers Almanac and the range of tidal height seems to be less than that outside except after a period of strong easterly winds. Over the 35 years that I have lived here there have been four occasions when the wind driven storm tides ran between four and five feet above the level of a normal 11 foot tide which occurs about a dozen times a year.

There have been problems with the growth of algae in parts of Little Harbor, particularly inside Cat Dam which many feel should be kept open to regular tidal flow. There are also serious problems regarding failing septic systems and overflowing storm drains plus runoff from fertilizers and toxic lawn weed applications. The town is still under the gun of the Amended Agreement for Judgment entered into some years ago with the Commonwealth committing the town to remedy the situation, presumably by the installation of a sewerage system to service the whole Little Harbor area. The alternative would appear to require individual septic systems, either way, at vast expense.

Meanwhile, the clam beds, which yielded plenty of bait to fish for plentiful flounder, remain closed. A great many of the migratory shore birds that used to stop by to refuel on their paths north in the spring and back south in the fall don't seem to flock through here any more. Maybe the runoff from our lawns doesn't promote the growth of whatever they used to eat at low tide any more., although we do get some lesser yellowlegs, blackbellied. plover and some sanderling still. And we do have many more egrets than we used to, along with too many Canada geese, several varieties of ducks, some swans, comorants, plenty of seagulls, a few terns, frequent great blue herons and an occasional kingfisher.

No more Proprietors, though.

Cohasset history available in June

Jackie Dormitzer has captured the people and the events of the 1960s decade, a period of expansion.

Available in less than a month, the Narrative History of Cohasset Volume III brings Cohasset's local history from 1950 up to the year 2000. Read how your friends, neighbors and acquaintances have made Cohasset the town it is today. The volume is 432 pages long including a 20-page color insert and four map pages. There are a total of 244 photographs, over 50 in full color. The book is well sourced and indexed for easy researching. Any questions, you may call Wigmore Pierson at 781-383-6940.

You can reserve a copy by sending a check for $32 plus $3.50 for postage payable to the Town of Cohasset and mail to Committee on Town History, Town Hall, 41 Highland Avenue, Cohasset, MA 02025.

The Black Rock House on Jerusalem Road, built in 1904, was a world-famous hostelry until World War II, when business began a steep decline that continued into the 1960s. The building was razed in 1968. This is just one of hundreds of pictures throughout this 432 page, 50-year history.

Remembering Clark Chatterton

The members of the Clark Chatterton Memorial Fund Committee would like to thank all the residents of Cohasset who have contributed to the memorial fund established in Clark's memory.

One project the Committee has undertaken (with the assistance of the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club) will be the installation of a new basketball court in the playground behind the renovated Deer Hill School - it is anticipated that it will be completed prior to this fall.

The fund also contributed to the new discus cage on Alumni Field and there will be a Life Fitness Cross Trainer exercise machine donated in his name to the new fitness center at the Cohasset Middle High School. We are hopeful that this new piece of equipment will be available for use when school opens in September.

Finally, the Committee invites all runners and walkers, young and old, to participate in the first annual "Clark's Fund Run" which is scheduled for: Saturday, June 15, at 10 a.m. The "Run/Walk" is a 3.5 mile race that begins and ends at the South Shore Music Circus. The registration fee (postmarked by June 1) is $12 and applications may be picked up at Good Sport or at the Cohasset Middle High School. Any questions should be directed to: Debbie Beal, Physical Education Teacher, Cohasset Middle High School. Late registrations (postmarked after June 1) are $15.

Any individuals or companies that would be interested in being a sponsor for this event should also contact Debbie at 781-383-6103.

WORSHIP NOTES

Mitzvah Day

Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St., Hingham, will celebrate its sixth Annual Social Action Day Sunday, May 19, beginning with bagels, pastry and drinks at 8:30 a.m. and concluding with a community-wide barbecue from 12:30 to 2 p.m.

The event is more familiarly known as Mitzvah Day, because the commandments that require one to give his time, money, efforts and talents to benefit his fellow man are fulfilled. Helping others is among the most fundamental of all Jewish virtues. By being involved in the varied activities available that day, everyone gets an opportunity to express Judaism's most profound belief that actions are greater than words.

If your inclination is to physical activity, you can sign up to clean up a beach or park, help beautify the grounds around the temple or walk over to the Mary Martha Learning Center and help the folks there spruce up for spring. Families can make personal Mezuzot to put up on their children's bedroom doorways. Families can also donate food, litter, blankets and other items to benefit All Paws Rescue. Adults can donate sample sizes of toiletries as well as laundry detergent, dish detergent, face cloths and the like to a battered women's shelter. Adults can sign up to give blood to the Red Cross. Also, adults can visit several senior citizens' homes to help them with house repairs, and families can create wonderful get-well cards for children and adults who are in area hospitals.

All activities originate at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St., at 8:30 a.m. Call 781-749-8103 to get more information and/or directions. The temple is wheelchair accessible. Non-members are always welcome.

Karol honored

Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St. in Hingham will honor Rabbi Stephen A. Karol on Friday evening, June 7 at a special service beginning at 7:30 p.m. Also on Sunday, June 9, from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., there will be an open house at the Temple to provide the entire community a less-formal opportunity to wish the Karol family all the best on their move to Long Island.

There are other ways you can express your good wishes to Rabbi Karol. Please call the Temple office at 781-749-8103.

Saving babies, together

Half of pregnancies are unexpected.
(But that's not the real surprise.)

The real surprise is that there's something women can do to reduce the risk of certain serious birth defects. Simply take a multivitamin with folic acid every day as part of a healthy diet, whether or not you plan on a visit from the stork. Another surprise: some studies show folic acid also may help protect women from cervical and colon cancer. For more information, contact the March of Dimes at 1-888-MODIMES or www.modimes.org

Marshfield man struck by car

By Gregory Mathis
GMATHIS@CNC.COM

A 35-year-old Marshfield man was taken by Medflight helicopter to a Boston hospital after sustaining multiple injuries when he was struck by a car Tuesday afternoon at the intersection of Carlton Road and Ireland Road near the Bridgwaye Inn.

Marshfield police issued a citation to Kira Stairs, 17, of Stoneleigh Lane in Cohasset, the driver of the car that hit Raymond K. Gillis of 32 Columbia Road. Stairs will be summonsed to court on charges of operating to endanger, operating a motor vehicle with defective equipment and she was also cited for speeding. A juvenile girl from Marshfield who lives in the area of the accident was a passenger in Stairs' car, according to police.

According to Marshfield Police Lt. Jay Crowley, Gillis was waiting at a bus stop at the intersection of Carlton Road and Ireland Road just after 3 p.m. when Stairs came around the corner from Ireland Road onto Carlton Road and struck him.

Acting Fire Chief Kevin Robinson said the Marshfield ambulance and safety personnel arrived at the scene at 3:12 p.m. and immediately called for a Medflight helicopter. Robinson said Gillis was conscious when Marshfield emergency personnel arrived, but he had received multiple injuries from being struck by the car and a pre-existing condition that warranted the Medflight call. Robinson said Gillis recently had spinal surgery.

The Medflight helicopter landed at the Bridgwaye Inn parking lot and took Gillis to Brigham & Women's Hospital in Boston.

At 4:30 p.m. Tuesday, a hospital spokesman said Gillis was still being treated in the emergency room at Brigham & Women's and hospital staff was unable to provide his condition.

Further details concerning the accident were unavailable at press time.

POLICE BRIEFS

Police arrested 13 last month

April was a relatively quiet month for the Cohasset Police Department.

There were 13 arrests, one for Fugitive from Justice, seven for Outstanding Warrants, two for Operating Under the Influence of Liquor, one for Illegal Possession of a Controlled Substance, one for Malicious Destruction of Property, and one for Motor Vehicle Violations, chief Robert Jackson said.

During the month of April the police department investigated 11 motor vehicle accidents, one of which resulted in personally injury. There were 137 Motor Vehicle Citations issued totaling $5,720.00. Additionally, there were 46 parking tickets issued for $1,325 in fines. There were eight Criminal Complaints issued, Jackson said.

Also in April the Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 731 calls for police services, of those 113 were Emergency 911 calls.

In the month of April there was one breaking and entering of a Residence.

On April 22, the Cohasset Police Department became part of the Boston Area Police Emergency Network (BAPERN). This initiative will provide back up radio communication capabilities in the event of a catastrophic loss of the local communications network. A State Community Policing Grant provided funding for this initiative.

As part of the Executive Office of Public Safety's Anti-Terrorism efforts Cohasset Police, Fire and Emergency management have become part of the Statewide Anti-Terrorism Unified Response Network (SATURN).

The local SATURN team will consist of Fire Chief Roger Lincoln, Police Chief Robert W. Jackson, and Emergency Director Arthur Lehr. SATURN team members will act as point of contact to state and federal counterparts, coordinate Anti-Terrorism training for colleagues, facilitate the active exchange of information and intelligence between all parties, respond to citizens concerns, and act as a recourse to educate the public about the Commonwealth's Anti-Terrorism efforts.

Suspect nabbed after investigation

On May 8, police arrested William C. Hayes, 35, of 34 Bay St. Apt 1 Rear, Hull after a week-long investigation. Hayes had been passing stolen checks for cash and merchandise totaling in the thousands of dollars in several communities including Cohasset, Hingham, Hanover, Milton, and Weymouth. Hayes had been avoiding arrest, but was tracked down by police at a motel in Saugus.

Hayes was arrested and arraigned in Quincy District Court on the following Cohasset charges: Larceny of Property over $250, Receiving Stolen Property under $250. Uttering a Forged Instrument, and Identity Fraud. He also faces charges from several other communities. He is currently being held at the Dedham House of Correction on $2,500 cash bail. He is due back in court on May 23. Detective Garrett Hunt from Cohasset and Detective Robert Mansfield from Hingham headed the investigation.

Rating the ratings

Families find the letters and numbers don't always fit the film

By Robert Aicardi
BAICARDI@CNC.COM

This summer's movie blockbusters are just around the corner but what the season's biggest hits are rated may have little to do with how much money they bring in, as families depend less and less on a rating system that they say too often doesn't tell the whole story.

Jack Valenti, the president of the Motion Picture Association of America, is convinced that parents trust the MPAA's rating system and find it useful in helping them determine what films their children should see.

But others disagree.

"Under our famously flawed rating system, many PG movies include graphic material that would horrify most parents," according to critic Michael Medved.

"Even among those relatively rare releases that draw the purportedly wholesome PG rating (less than 18 percent of Hollywood's overall product), an appalling 60 percent show violent confrontations and fight scenes," Medved wrote. "It is small wonder that so many sensitive parents have given up on the MPAA ratings altogether as any sort of reliable guide to appropriate entertainment for their children."

A mother of two children, interviewed at a Weymouth theater, shares Medved's sentiments.

"I don't pay attention to the ratings any more," she said. "They're not tough enough about language and violence. I ask around about a movie, and if people tell me it's not good for kids, I don't take my kids to see it. I don't want to give them nightmares."

Largely because of widespread complaints about the violence in "Gremlins" and "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom," two PG-rated 1984 blockbusters, a PG-13 rating was created which "strongly cautions" parents that some material may not be suitable for viewers under 13.

Ironically, public outcry was responsible for the eventual implementation of the controversial rating system.

The seeds of today's G, PG, PG-13, R, and NC-17 ratings were sown in the 1920s when scandals like the case of comedian Fatty Arbuckle rocked Hollywood, leading to demands from church groups and government agencies for some form of cinematic clean-up.

The film industry decided to compile a "Code to Govern the Making of Motion Pictures" in 1930 and turned it over to former Postmaster General Will Hays for administration.

In this way, studios managed to avoid outside censorship, but at a cost that many filmmakers found absurd.

As Oscar-winning screenwriter James R. Webb put it, "I can recall when you couldn't put a man and a woman into a bedroom even to fix the curtains."

Under the Code, Hollywood prospered until foreign films like Federico Fellini's "La Dolce Vita" began to attract growing audiences in the United States.

The Code was sharply revised in 1966, when the film version of Edward Albee's play "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" was approved although its dialogue was a direct violation of the Code's policy on profanity.

"Not only were the teeth of the earlier Code drawn, but also its fingernails and even the toenails until almost anything could be presented on screen," PulitzerPrize-winning novelist James A. Michener observed.

The original Code had been severe in its prohibitions, insisting, "Details of crime must never be shown. There must be no suggestion of excessive brutality. There must be no display of machine guns in the hands of gangsters or other criminals. Complete nudity is never permitted. Obscenity in word, gesture, reference, song, joke, or by suggestion, even when likely to be understood only by part of the audience, is forbidden."

Under these restrictions, of course, such Oscar-winning Best Pictures as "The Godfather" and "Schindler's List" could never have been made.

Local movie fans line up at the Independence Mall Cinema for the opening of "Osmosis Jones" last summer. Judy Roy and daughters, Stephanie and Caitlin had a special interest in the locally shot film — the only PG rated movie at the theatre — as they had roles as extras.

Under the leadership of the MPAA, a rating system was devised, with the National Association of Theater Owners agreeing to abide by the new classifications.

After November 1, 1968, films produced in the United States or imported from abroad were rated either G (general audiences) M (mature audiences), R (restricted to those under 17 unless accompanied by an adult), or X (no one under 17 admitted).

During the first year of the new system, 41 percent of all American releases earned the mildest possible designation: a G rating.

Interestingly, in the past several years, it has been rare when a live action film carries a G rating, although it did happen last summer with "The Princess Diaries" and is happening again with "The Rookie," starring Dennis Quaid.

The scarcity of films for general audiences surprised and disturbed the late Steve Allen, who pointed out that when a team of university economists and statisticians studied bottom line statistics of more than 2,000 films released between 1988 and 1997, G-rated movies showed the highest total profit per film, generating a 78 percent higher rate of return on investment than R-rated films.

The M rating was changed to GP in 1970, but this revised rating didn't last long. Since many people thought that it stood for either "General Public" or "General Patronage," they were disturbed to find mature elements in a GP film. As a result, the rating was changed to PG (parental guidance) in 1972.

When the X rating became synonymous with hard core pornography, the NC-17 rating was created, but studios have come to avoid it just as much as the dreaded X because many newspapers refuse to carry ads for even such critically acclaimed NC-17 films as "Henry & June," starring Uma Thurman and directed by Philip Kaufman of "The Right Stuff" fame.

The development of the NC-17 category has led to several well-publicized battles involving the seven-member rating board.

"The MPAA's Code and Rating Administration is given no power to prohibit or expurgate anything, but the rating board does more than simply label films," critic Stephen Farber wrote. "Films are altered at all stages of production because of the interference of the board."

To cite only three recent examples, Oliver Stone's "Natural Born Killers," Martin Scorsese's "Casino," and the animated musical "South Park" were trimmed before they could be rated the commercially acceptable R, rather than NC-17.

Although Valenti continues to insist that the rating system he helped create over three decades ago is working well, it's a common phenomenon to come out of a theater saying either "Why was that rated PG-13? It was so violent it should have been rated R" or "They rated that R just because of some cursing? I've seen a lot worse in a PG-13."

Funny lady goes far in festival

It was no big deal to Annette Pollack that her game effort did not go the distance in the third annual Boston Comedy Festival last week end. The comedienne and Braintree resident has a lot more than her day job as a CPA to fall back on.

Pollack was one of eight semi-finalists appearing in the festival's standup comic competition in the face-off at Boston's Jacob Wirth restaurant and pub last Friday evening, but fell short of advancing to the final round. The semi-finalist winner, Boston-area club comic Matty Blake moved on to the finals at the Comedy Connection in Fanueil Hall the following evening, but lost out to another Hub funnyman, Robbie Prinz. Prinz then highlighted the bill later Saturday at the festival's grand finale show at the Berklee Performance Center, which also featured veteran Boston standup master Lenny Clarke, plus homegrown Comedy Central stars Adam Ferrara, Eddie Brill and many others.

"I was playing at the clubs in Los Angeles last fall, and people kept coming up to me and asking 'Aren't you scared to fly after September 11?'" "And I said" —slipping into female Sam Kinison mode— 'No, I'm afraid of flying to a place where nobody lets you smoke anywhere in the state!'"

But the Boston Comedy Festival is as much an opportunity for meeting and greeting industry insiders and making connections even for also-rans in the top-prize competition. Such was certainly the case for Pollack, who mingled with folks like finale show star and Conan O'Brien Show writer Brian Kiley along with numerous friends and other Boston comedy scene regulars. She also continues to host her well-publicized and regular Comedy Night revue at Braintree's Jimbo's Restaurant on every third Thursday evening, and is currently looking to expand into other area venues, while keeping a steady schedule of Boston and sometimes national club dates.

"I had a great time this weekend," said Pollack, following the grand finale gala late last Saturday. "Naturally, I would have liked to win the competition like everyone else who entered. But it was a great experience just being involved in it. It was very exciting, and I met a lot of great people that I know from around the club scene and a lot of industry and com-

Witherspoon goes Wilde

Feisty actress stars in the 'Importance of Being Earnest'

By Ed Symkus
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Reese Witherspoon has a high forehead, a pointed little nose, a mouth that can effortlessly stretch into dozens of shapes and a slightly nasal voice that still carries a bit of a Tennessee accent. She can bat her eyelashes with the best of them and, even at age 26, she comes off as a sweet little girl.

Best known for her roles as strong-willed young women in the comedies "Election" and "Legally Blonde," she's now donning a perfect English accent in the midst of an otherwise all-British cast in a new film version of Oscar Wilde's comedy of classes, "The Importance of Being Earnest."

Witherspoon plays Cecily, the young niece to one of the film's two title characters (Colin Firth) and the romantic interest of the other one (Rupert Everett). Cecily is pretty much marooned out at the family estate, daydreaming about meeting a man.

Witherspoon spent three months in England making the film, at the same time her husband, Ryan Phillippe, was putting on a Scottish accent for "Gosford Park."

"By the time we left, we were feeling like proper anglophiles," she says, laughing. "My daughter April, particularly, picked up her own English accent. She was saying, 'Mummy, I need to get in my push chair.' And I'm thinking, 'What the hell's a push chair?' "

Witherspoon may be one of the busiest actors around. She's started her own production company, her role in "Sweet Home Alabama" is nearing completion, a script for a follow-up to "Legally Blonde" is coming in any day now, and has the starring role in the film version of the '60s TV show "Honey West" in the wings. But she likes to think of herself of an actor who also happens to be a wife and a mom.

"I still go to the grocery store and stuff," she says. "I think it's important to maintain a certain degree of normalcy and remember where you came from. Sometimes it's a little difficult, but I don't have a whole lot to hide.

"Our marriage is the top priority in our life," she adds. "We talk about things, we work things out. I think every marriage has its ups and downs. It's not all like Hollywood fairy tale romance where everyday it's, 'Oh, honey! Could you get my marabou slippers out of the closet?

High roast asparagus

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

This is asparagus season and most of us simply steam it and serve it as an unadorned side dish. I wanted to find a cooking method that would enhance its full flavor while adding a quick, light sauce that would complement rather than obscure its subtle taste.

Most vegetables, especially root vegetables, can be cooked in a very hot oven in a roasting pan. I opted for a skillet since I also wanted to throw together a quick pan sauce. Working with a pound and a half of asparagus (enough for 4 to 6 people), I found that a 12-inch skillet was necessary, although they did not fit in one layer. I quickly determined that oven temperature was key. At 400 degrees, it took the asparagus a full 20 minutes or more to cook; at 450 degrees that cooking time was almost halved and the asparagus gained a great deal of flavor. Higher temperature simply dried out the tips. I found it helpful to purchase asparagus that is of a relatively even diameter to promote even cooking. Also, most of my testing was done with moderately thin stalks – neither the hulking tree trunks nor the pencil thin varieties often seen in stores at this time of year.

For the sauce, I wanted to keep it light and simple. I removed the asparagus from the skillet (be VERY careful not to burn yourself – the skillet handle will be EXTREMELY hot), put it on a warmed plate, and then starting cooking. I started with a tablespoon of olive oil and then added 1 1/2 cups of diced tomatoes (about 3 medium). I quickly discovered that it is very important to keep the dice small since they cook faster. For flavorings, I tried vinegar, lemon juice, onion, shallots, and garlic. The only winner was the lemon juice. For herbs, I tested basil, parsley, tarragon, chives, mint, and marjoram with basil and parsley emerging as the only strong candidates.

Now I had the simplest, freshest possible sauce. Add olive oil to the hot skillet over medium heat, sauté the diced tomatoes and a bit of salt for 2 or 3 minutes, remove the skillet from the heat and add lemon juice, basil, pepper and a tablespoon of good olive oil. Check seasonings, pour over the asparagus, and you're done.

Finally, an anchovy/caper/olive combination also worked well. This variation is below.

HIGH ROAST ASPARAGUS WITH FRESH TOMATO/ BASIL SAUCE

Moderately thin stalks are best, neither pencil-thin nor large lumber-size. Keep in mind that the thickness of the asparagus will affect roasting times. Use firm, ripe tomatoes.

1 1/2 pounds asparagus, rinsed and tough ends snapped off
3 tablespoons best quality olive oil
1/2 teaspoon kosher salt
1 1/2 cups seeded, cored and diced (1/2-inch size) tomatoes, about 3 medium
1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 tablespoons chopped fresh basil or flat leaf parsley
Freshly ground pepper to taste

1. Heat the oven to 450 degrees and warm a serving plate in the oven as it heats up (remove when hot). Place the asparagus in a heavy duty 10- to 12-inch skillet (12 inches preferred). Toss with one tablespoon olive oil and 1/4 teaspoon salt. Roast in the oven until the asparagus is just tender, 10 to 15 minutes depending on the thickness of the stalks.

2. Turn the asparagus onto warmed plate and cover to keep warm. Place the skillet over medium heat. Add one tablespoon olive oil and swirl pan to coat the bottom. Add the tomatoes and the remaining 1/4 teaspoon salt. Cook, stirring occasionally until the tomatoes have heated through and softened slightly and started to exude juice, about 2 to 3 minutes. Off the heat stir in the lemon juice, basil or parsley, a few grinds of pepper, and remaining tablespoon olive oil. Taste for seasoning adding salt and pepper if needed.

Serves 4 to 6 as a side dish.

Anchovy/Caper/Olive Variation

Add one large or two small chopped anchovies to the pan when adding the initial tablespoon of olive oil in step two. Cook until the anchovies start to break down, about one minute. Omit the salt in step two. Along with the tomatoes add one tablespoon drained capers. Off heat add six coarsely chopped oil cured or Kalamata olives along with the other ingredients.

Witherspoon goes Wilde

Get your silk pajamas and we'll go have martinis.' We feel very invested in our relationship.

"I love children, and my husband loves children. He's even better with our daughter than I am. You know how they get into those temper tantrums and it's like they're on the edge of a cliff? He knows how to just talk her off the cliff. And his negotiation skills are amazing. He could work for the CIA."

But don't let the sweet talk fool you. Witherspoon is also extremely serious about her career, one that's been very busy over the past decade. Other titles include "American Psycho," "Cruel Intentions" and "Pleasantville," in which she starred opposite then up-and-coming Tobey Maguire.

"I'm very careful with the decisions I make because the amount of work you have to put into a film — 18-20-hour days, 10-12 weeks of shooting — is exhausting," she says. "And you have to be 100 percent passionate about a project. That's what gets you through the 18th or 19th hour of shooting. And you have to say, 'I love this movie and I want people to see this character.' Because I connect with the characters. Sometimes there'll be great directors but the material will be something I just can't connect to."

Or, truth be told, sometimes she'll get so flustered by being around movie stars, she'll flub an audition, like she did when she tried out for the part of Nick Nolte's daughter in "Cape Fear."

"Everybody gets nervous meeting stars," she explains, completely forgetting that she's one. "I know they're just people, but I guess you have this perception of them being larger than life. At the heart of it, I'm just a little girl from Tennessee. When it all comes down to it, your adrenaline gets going and you think of yourself as that little person growing up. I couldn't believe I'd made it to the Oscars this year and was standing there on the stage, giving an award. I was just blown away by it. It was really exciting."

Witherspoon is momentarily caught up in the Oscar experience, where she was a presenter.

"It was so exciting to meet Annette Bening there," she says. "She's really a role model for me. Here's a woman who's managed to balance a family life. Then, you know, she goes away and has a child and comes back and does a movie like 'American Beauty.' She cares about what she does."

As, obviously, does Witherspoon, who exercises regularly and is in training for her next film, which she'll star in and produce, about women's professional tennis.

"Actually, I've been working with a trainer ever since 'Legally Blonde,' " she says. "Because I had to be in that bikini. The bikini was nice. But the idea of being in a bikini in front of millions and millions of people — I got scared into going to the gym."

But that's just another sign of how she approaches her craft. Oliver Parker, her director in "The Importance of Being Earnest," says he cast her because "it was quite plain after I'd seen 'Election.' Because what I wanted was to have this sweet, innocent face with a bit of a tiger underneath. And Reese is a really strong, feisty character, with very powerful opinions.

"She knows what she wants, and she'll usually get it," he adds with a nervous laugh. Then he brings up what she did with her accent in his film.

"She works like crazy, a real perfectionist," he says. "So she gets the accent, then adds layers of character where, 'Oh there's a bit of country there; ah, and now she's doing a bit of the old fashioned because she sees herself as a slightly old-fashioned gal in the country.' I was intrigued by that. You get a sense that this woman is very determined. She's going to have a fascinating career. No one's going to stop her."

"The Importance of Being Earnest" opens on May 24.

edy scene folks from out of town for the first time as well."

Pollack, 47, has been a professional standup comic and familiar face on the club scene since 1993, but was a fervent comedy fan and Boston club regular long before that. A decade ago, she decided to give her own brand of standup routines a shot at the encouragement of friends and one Boston club comic chum in particular, moving on to take a six-week workshop course in comedy performance and writing at the Cambridge Center for Adult Education.

Pollack's study and enthusiasm paid off, as soon after completing the course she was landing spots on Boston comedy club bills and then before long was performing in laugh venues up and down the East Coast as well. She also founded the Jimbo's Comedy Night in 1993, and the regular show has gone strong while Pollack has performed numerous benefit shows, colleges and clubs around New England and even extended her talents to a permanent starring role in the area production of Joey and Maria's Italian Comedy Wedding, appearing in local clubs and restaurants from 1995 to 2000.

Friday evening, Pollack engaged a ready Jacob Wirth crowd with an eight-minute set containing her typically cynical, often saucy, views on her life, her family upbringing and the off-kilter world around her, all delivered with a characteristically suburban flair. Views such as these samplings:

"I saw an ad that said 'Puppy free to good home.' I've always liked to adopt dogs, so I answered the ad and the gentleman said 'well, do you come from a good home?' (puzzled pause) "Well, my father used to beat me, my mother used to drink... OK, sorry I called."

"I was playing at the clubs in Los Angeles last fall, and people kept coming up to me and asking 'Aren't you scared to fly after September 11?'" "And I said" —slipping into female Sam Kinison mode— 'No, I'm afraid of flying to a place where nobody lets you smoke anywhere in the state!'"

The Comedy Night series continues this Thursday at Jimbo's, with this week's featured guest, Comedy Central and A&E's Evening @ the Improv star Kevin Knox. Coming for the next show (June 6), longtime Boston-grown favorite Chance Langton.

Fertilizer basics

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

A stroll through the garden during the month of May is truly a feast for the senses. As tender young leaves emerge on trees and shrubs, our landscapes are gradually draped with a muted veil of soft yellow-green tones. Against this delicate background, bold splashes of vividly tinted flowers paint a colorful portrait of breathtaking grandeur.

Gentle breezes carry the heavenly perfume of spring blossoms through the garden. Luscious lilacs in shades of pink, lavender, blue, purple, or white produce elegant, sweetly-scented, conical clusters containing a myriad of small, tubular, single or double flowers. Equally intoxicating are the fragrant pink and white flowers of Daphne 'Carol Mackie', its attractive, deep green foliage, with thin white margins persisting well into winter. The Viburnum family offers numerous, marvelously aromatic varieties. Often referred to as the Maybush, the Koreanspice Viburnum (V. carlesii) is widely grown for its strong perfume and attractive foliage. Clusters of white flowers emerge from pink- or red-tinted buds, unveiling their sweet, spicy perfume during May.

To enjoy these spring delights from season to season, our plants require routine maintenance. Deadheading and pruning, watering and mulching, and the periodic addition of amendments to the soil including organic matter and nutrients are essential to the health of our plants if we wish them to thrive year after year.

A well-prepared soil is the first step to healthy, vigorous plants. Heavy clay soils are dense and drain slowly, which may prevent air from reaching plant roots and lead to rot during periods of dampness. Dry, sandy soils drain rapidly demanding constant irrigation and nutrients are quickly swept away each time plants are watered. The presence of organic matter (decomposed plant and animal matter) improves the texture of all soil types and provides beneficial microorganisms that convert nutrients in the organic matter to inorganic nutrients that our plants can use. Over time, even soils once rich in humus become depleted and new sources of organic material in the form of well-decomposed manure, compost, peat moss or shredded leaves must be added.

Plants require more than 15 chemical elements to grow properly. The essential elements of carbon, hydrogen and oxygen are made available through the atmosphere and water. Equally important are the macronutrients of nitrogen (N), phosphorus (P) and potassium (K). In addition, there are secondary nutrients and micronutrients that are needed for the overall vigor of our plants. The application of organic and inorganic fertilizers is generally recommended to ensure an adequate supply of these elements.

Although not every plant in the landscape needs fertilizer every season, most will benefit from a routine feeding. The need to provide supplemental nutrients is highest for vegetables and lawns, medium for fruits and annuals and less critical for established perennials, trees and shrubs.

Commercial fertilizers list the percentage of nitrogen (N), phosphorus (P) and potassium (K), in that order, on the outside of the container as these are the elements that plants require in the largest quantities. Liquid soluble fertilizers that are mixed in watering cans or applied with hoses provide a "quick fix" but need to be repeated several times during the growing season for best results. Granular fertilizers have a longer lasting effect as they gradually release their elements into the soil every time water is applied.

Nitrogen is the element that is essential for rapid plant growth and deep green foliage. Too much nitrogen, however, has the potential for burning plants and may result in lush, tender leafy growth making the plants more inviting to insects and more susceptible to diseases while diminishing flower production. Plants grown for their foliage, including lawn grasses, will benefit from a fertilizer high in nitrogen but those grown for their flowers respond better to fertilizers having lower nitrogen content.

Phosphorus promotes root growth and disease resistance and is especially important for plants early in their development when they are forming flowers, seeds and fruits. In order for a plant to absorb phosphorus, the pH of the soil needs to be between pH 6.0 and 7.0. In early spring, cool temperatures further minimize the availability of phosphorus, and because it moves slowly through the soil, it should be mixed into the ground as deeply as possible to make it available to the roots of the plant. The addition of superphosphate to the soil is often helpful in stimulating flowering plants to bloom.

Potassium or potash adds vigor and disease resistance but unlike phosphorus it leaches out of the soil readily. Wood ashes are a good, natural source of potash but too much may alter the pH of the soil significantly and should be used in moderation, especially around acid-loving plants.

Organic fertilizers are valuable for their ability to improve soils structure enabling the soil to hold moisture, air and nutrients more efficiently. These fertilizers generally take longer to work but reduce the possibility of over- fertilizing. Compost, well-decomposed manure, blood meal, bone meal and fish emulsion are all sources of slow-release nutrients. Look for fertilizers produced by Espoma and the Mass. Nurserymen's Association for excellent organic products suitable for all types of plantings.

There are any number of special formulations available for specific groups of plants but a balanced, complete fertilizer like Plant-O-Ganic 8-8-8 provides season long nutrition for nearly all plants in the landscape. Consult your local nurserymen or the County Extension Service for specific recommendations.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MAY 15

At 5:08 a.m. the Gemini moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. A Cancer moon takes over at 7:33 a.m. However, the planet Mercury takes the spotlight today. At 2:50 p.m. Mercury, standing at 10-degrees Gemini, begins retrograde travel until June 8. Signing contracts, launching enterprises or making major commitments, purchases are off limits. You can make gains on an inner, spiritual level rather than in your external, professional world.

THURSDAY, MAY 16

A lunar alignment to Jupiter generates an upbeat mood this morning. The Cancer moon prompts you to focus on domestic issues. Plan a family gathering. Get in touch with people you haven't heard from in a while. This is an ideal time to tackle redecorating, repainting or remodeling projects. Be more nurturing and sensitive to the needs of loved ones.

FRIDAY, MAY 17

At 7:27 a.m. the Cancer moon aligns with the sun and becomes inactive. This is a morning to clean out closets and drawers; get your home or office spic and span. A playful Leo moon takes over at 1:52 p.m. The evening is prime for partying. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

SATURDAY, MAY 18

A Leo moon sets the stage for an upbeat, social weekend. This morning a lunar alignment to Neptune can make for a slow start. Don't take on more than you can handle. This influence passes over by midmorning and the remainder of the day rates high for fun and games. Gather with friends and enjoy good food, conversation, music. A harmonious alignment of Venus and Uranus may spark romantic passions. Sail the love boat to exotic ports.

SUNDAY, MAY 19

A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Uranus urges you to unplug from daily routines. This is a wonderful day to try something different. Be more adventurous and spontaneous. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 3:42 p.m., serving as a reminder that this moon is growing in light. The coming week will be action-packed until the lunar eclipse/full moon culminates on May 26. Today the Leo moon becomes inactive at 4:34 p.m. until 6:01 p.m., when it enters Virgo.

MONDAY, MAY 20

This day has its challenges. Resolve to maintain a positive, easy-going attitude. Eat light foods and avoid stimulants. The moon travels in Mercury-ruled Virgo, forming stressful alignments to Mercury in the morning and Saturn/Pluto in the evening. There are likely to be breakdowns, reversals, unexpected difficulties. Stay busy with projects that need a finishing touch, clean out, redo. Venus moves into the Cancer at 9:27 a.m., remaining there until June 14.

TUESDAY, MAY 21

Gear up for another hectic day. The sun enters the sign Gemini at 1:29 a.m. The Virgo moon forms a 90-degree alignment to Mars at 12:53 p.m. and becomes inactive. Read yesterday's advice. Move cautiously in business and romance. Pursue activities that help you to relax and maintain a peaceful, positive attitude. Influences begin to lighten up at 8:19 p.m., when the moon enters Libra.

Common changes looked at

Workshop is May 29

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Situated in the middle of town, the common is often perceived as the heart of Cohasset. It is also one of the most historic areas; its lineage can be traced back to the late 1600s.

While many residents think the common shouldn't be altered in any way — it has actually undergone many changes in its storied history.

The Cohasset Common Landscape Preservation Committee has been developing a new vision for the green. The architectural firm of Carr, Lynch/Denig, Hermann and Sandell, Inc., has been assisting the town in developing a community-supported plan for the common.

The firm hopes to coordinate its project with revitalization of the village to create less chaos due to construction.

"With the changes happening in the village this is a good opportunity to examine the adjacent space

Ledge still an issue

Beach St. lawyers argue both sides

By Mary Ford

It's complicated. But this is Cohasset where residents are either lawyers themselves or don't hesitate to hire them. And like other town boards, the Zoning Board of Appeals more often than not provides an arena for legal jousting.

The issue is a familiar one —"Lot 2" Beach Street — now owned by real estate developer David Walsh, who has drawn up plans for a home to be constructed on a lot overlooking Little Harbor in one of the toniest neighborhoods in town. But it's the access to the proposed house, which, if constructed, would have "mega" views, that is source of the legal wrangling.

Making strides against cancer

Relay raises $127K

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

It had the feel of a large concert. There were tents sprouting up everywhere, kids playing with soccer balls on the fields, and a band serenading attendees. This was no Woodstock but much like that historic concert — there were plenty of people attending with myriad stories to tell.

Insa Rooney of Hingham served as co-captain of the Glastenbury Abbey team, which boasted almost 50 walkers. She said she became involved with the relay after becoming friends with a co-worker who was diagnosed with cancer.

Rooney, like most at the event, had a positive attitude about the relay and saw it as an affirmation of spirit.

"This is a relay for life," she emphasized. "This is not a relay for cancer."

The American Cancer Society's Relay For Life drew more than 700 people last week to Cohasset High School where participants walked around a track all night in an effort to raise awareness and money for the fight against cancer.

Ann Marie Goff, who co-captained Clark's Energizers a team in honor of the late Clark Chatterton, is in her second year of participation with the relay. Her team remembers Chatterton, who was the middle high school's athletic director for many years. In front of the team's tent, there was a lacrosse net adorned with various athletic equipment including a football, soccer ball, hockey stick and numerous jerseys from the school's teams.

"This is a relay for life. This is not a relay for cancer."
— Insa Rooney, team co-captain

Goff, who is also a cancer survivor, said she isn't participating for herself.

"I want to find a cure for my kids and their kids," she said. "I hope we can finally solve this disease."

Another personal story is that of Donna McGee who was on the Mighty McGee's, a team formed for her husband Jim who passed away 18 months ago.

Working in conjunction with Clark's Energizers and joined by her three children and three grandchildren, McGee feels this is a way to commemorate her husband.

"It's a memorial to him," she said. "It's a really nice way we can all get together and remember his life."

While most of the attention of the relay is turned towards the walkers, the volunteers also have stories to tell. Karen Burns, a cancer survivor who had a laryngectomy and now speaks through a mechanical device, worked in the survivor reception area.

Burns signed people up for the Survivors' Lap, a ceremonial first lap around the track walked solely by survivors, that would help them socialize and relax.

"I'm just glad to be here every year," she said. "I'm doing my part to help."

This is the third year of the event in town and more than $127,000 was raised for the cause. The funds will support the cancer society's programs of research, education, advocacy and services for local cancer patients and their families.

CHS grad makes grade on TV's Survivor

Kathy Vavrick-O'Brien

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

There may have been a higher percentage of residents watching the finale of Survivor 4 last weekend than normal. This could be attributed to the fact that one of Cohasset High School's graduates made it to the last episode of the show.

Kathy Vavrick-O'Brien, who graduated high school in 1972, was one of the final three contestants on the show before getting voted off. After living on Tahiti's island of Nuku Hiva in the Marquesas Archipelago in the South Pacific for 38 days, Vavrick-O'Brien said she learned a lot.

"I'm going to change my life by going and asking people what their soul's all about or even just talking to them and making sure they're okay," Vavrick-O'Brien said in a statement on CBS's Web site. "It's the relationships and how you can improve on them that I'm taking away."

While she was understandably impressed with the beauty of the Marquesas and the history of the island, Vavrick-O'Brien said she was stunned by the teamwork on the island.

"What's totally uncanny is that 16 strangers hit this island and the first thing off the bat we're working as a team and we're successfully getting everything done," she said. "The attitude was just hard-working work ethics, and success was always at the pinnacle of everyone's mindset."

Vavrick-O'Brien transferred to Cohasset High School in 1971 and became a cheerleader in her two years in town. In her senior yearbook quotes, she lists "being content in a little house in San Francisco" as her ambition and her favorite expression as "ahhhh – neat." She was also part of the homecoming court in her senior year.

In a previous interview, Vavrick-O'Brien

In step with tradition

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Come Monday, many Cohasset veterans will shake the dust off their old uniforms, breathe deeply as they fasten tired buttons over a little more girth around the middle than they had when they were younger, and don caps that represent the Navy, Air Force, Army, Marines, Merchant Marines or Coast Guard.

Some will practice a salute in the mirror before they head out the door, while others will pause as they pin on each medal and remember the day, the event, and the memories it conjures up.

As they assemble to march through the town cemeteries and down North and South Main streets and Elm Street to Veterans Memorial Park — to the cheers of the crowd and hundreds of children waving small American flags — these soldiers share in a bond that began with the very first Memorial Day nearly 135 years ago.

These Cohasset men and women, many of whom are getting on in years, share the pride of having served their country and the deep humility that only comes with having survived while others have not.

The traditional Memorial Day observances that have become legend in Cohasset continue Monday as they have for years. A band of soldiers will report to the George H. Mealy American Legion Post #118 on Summer Street at 7 a.m. for breakfast and camaraderie before marching to the Paul Pratt Library where they will board a bus to North Cohasset, the first stop in a long morning of remembrances. There they will visit the North Cohasset cemetery and memorial honor roll.

Then it's back on the bus to Woodside Cemetery where the soldiers will march to the new Gold Star Mothers memorial; from

ZBA: No roadblocks needed for Graham Waste relocation

Zoning board expected to give green light

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

How do you spell R-E-L-I-E-F?

When it comes to Graham Waste relocating across Route 3A — the answer could be N-O-N-E.

Although members of Zoning Board of Appeals won't vote on their decision until their June 3 meeting, they appear poised to rule the waste services company may not need any relief for construction within the water resources district.

But with the possibility of an appeal looming, board chairman Woody Chittick, who is writing the decision, is covering all bases. The draft decision discussed Monday includes conditions should an appeal result in the need for Graham Waste to have a special permit.

Chittick's judgment to draft a "catch-all" decision was likely prompted by concerns expressed by members of the local group SAFE that opposed expansion of Cohasset Heights Landfill, which is also owned by Paul Barry. Kevin O'Donnell and John McNabb, who is also a water commissioner, attended the public hearing on Graham Waste's application and expressed concern about the proposed facility being in the water resources district.

> "I don't see any grounds on which they need relief."
> — ZBA chairman Woody Chittick

Chittick said an opinion from Town Counsel stated Graham Waste, a construction-demolition debris company that supplies roll-off containers to work sites, is not a synonym for a solid waste facility that would be prohibited in the district.

Town Counsel said the proposed use does not come within the meaning of a solid-waste facility because it would not involve the "dumping, incineration, handling and/or transfer of solid waste."

"I don't see any grounds on which they need relief," Chittick said Monday.

Explaining further, Chittick said Graham Waste does not plan to store hazardous material, heating oil, have an on-site sewer, remove too many trees or too much vegetation or cover the area with more than 40 percent imperious matter — any of which would trigger the need for a special permit in the water resources district.

But Chittick included conditions just in case the courts alter the zoning board decision and a special permit is required. Chittick declined to provide the Mariner with a copy of the draft decision, opting to wait until the final decision is approved.

Graham Waste, which must relocate because its current site is being taken by eminent domain by the MBTA to make room for the Cohasset train station as part of the Greenbush restoration, plans to construct at 25,000-square-foot warehouse and 7,000-square-foot office off Crocker Lane. About 60 percent of the warehouse would lie in the water resources district.

Getting the fever

This Saturday, May 25 at 8 p.m. at the town hall auditorium will be a production of "The Fever". The one man play examines social issues and the disparity between rich and poor. Ther is only one show and tickets can be purchased at the door on a first-come, first-served basis. The tickets are availabe for a suggested donation $5 - $10. Proceeds benefit Wellspring MultiService Center and Cohasset Food Pantry. The production is supported by the Cohasset Diversity Committee and Cohasset's No Place for Hate Program.

Shedding new light

One of the most dangerous intersections in Cohasset, the intersection of Beechwood and Route 3A, will be getting a facelift. Thanks to Rep Garret Bradley, D-Hingham, and Sen. Bob Hedlund, R-Weymouth, a new lead/lag light fixture will be installed at the intersection. This will allow for a left-turn arrow for vehicles traveling north on 3A followed by a green signal in both directions, and then a left-turn arrow for those vehicles traveling south on 3A.

Bernard McCourt, the district highway director for MassHighway, said the operation will require the installation of new signal heads and wiring.

He said in a letter that he expects the work to be completed before the summer season.

Sticker time again

The expiration date of the beach and Recycling Transfer Facility permits is June 30. Beach and RTF permits for the fiscal year will be on sale starting June 3, during normal business hours at the Town Hall and at the DPW garage Monday through Friday, from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

An "all facilities" sticker will be $35 and for the second vehicle and for seniors is $20. This sticker will allow access to the Recycling Transfer Facility, as well as include parking at all areas in town that require a sticker.

Residents who do not utilize the RTF can purchase a beach sticker for $7 and the cost for a senior over 60 is $3. In addition, residents will be required to purchase special bags in which to dispose of all trash that cannot be recycled. These bags will be offered at various locations throughout the town.

You're encouraged to purchase your sticker through the mail by providing a copy of your registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

Water board officers

At its meeting held on Tuesday, April 30, the Board of Water Commissioners reorganized and elected the following officers: John K. McNabb as chairman; Robert E. Kasameyer as vice chairman and Glenn A. Pratt as clerk.

Meeting schedule

All meetings were posted at Town Hall as of May 20.

Government Island Study Committee, May 23, 7:30 p.m.

School Committee, May 23, 7:30 p.m. at the high school library

School Building Committee, May 28, 6 p.m.

Water Commission, May 23, 8 p.m. at 339 King St.

Zoning Board of Appeals, June 3, 7:30 p.m.

Lease opens chapter for children's educational center

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Can't make it to Russia this year? Have to put travel plans to Japan and Europe on hold for awhile? Don't worry, your children can still experience the wonders of these foreign lands without leaving the town's borders.

Our World, a children's global discovery museum, announced its signing of a lease with the town at the selectmen's meeting Tuesday. The museum will occupy a wing of the new library being built at the former Osgood School and will take up approximately 6,000 square feet. Adjacent to the museum will be a state-of-the-art playground, which museum founders are also trying to develop.

"This will be something the town can be proud of."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

"It has a global focus and our aim is bringing a sense of awareness to children that there's a big world out there," said Linda Shropshire a trustee on the board. "It will be focused on unity and love."

The lease with the town is for 10-years at $1 a year and specifies the use of the space for a children's museum.

"We have been working extremely diligently with the museum," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "This will be something the town can be proud of."

The mission of the center is to open a child's mind to the world and his or her place within it as well as promoting world unity through understanding the similarities in cultures. The museum, which is aimed at children ages two to six, also hopes to nurture an enthusiasm for learning.

"Our World will help children understand and appreciate the world around them," stated an information packet handed out at the selectmen's meeting. "It proclaims an attitude of tolerance and stimulates the ability to think of important questions while having fun."

The museum was developed with the help of Howard Gardner, a professor at Harvard, and his "multiple intelligences" theory that promotes using a variety of methods to enhance a child's learning experience. It emphasizes a range of important areas of knowledge including musical, mathematical, linguistic, and inter- and intra-personal relationships.

Shropshire said she hopes to work with area schools, including those in Hingham, Hull, Marshfield, Scituate, Hanover, Duxbury, and Norwell to use the museum to supplement the schools' curriculum.

The process began at the annual Town Meeting in 2000 when voters authorized the town to issue the lease. The town will not be held accountable for any of the cost of the project and Our World will hire all of its own engineers.

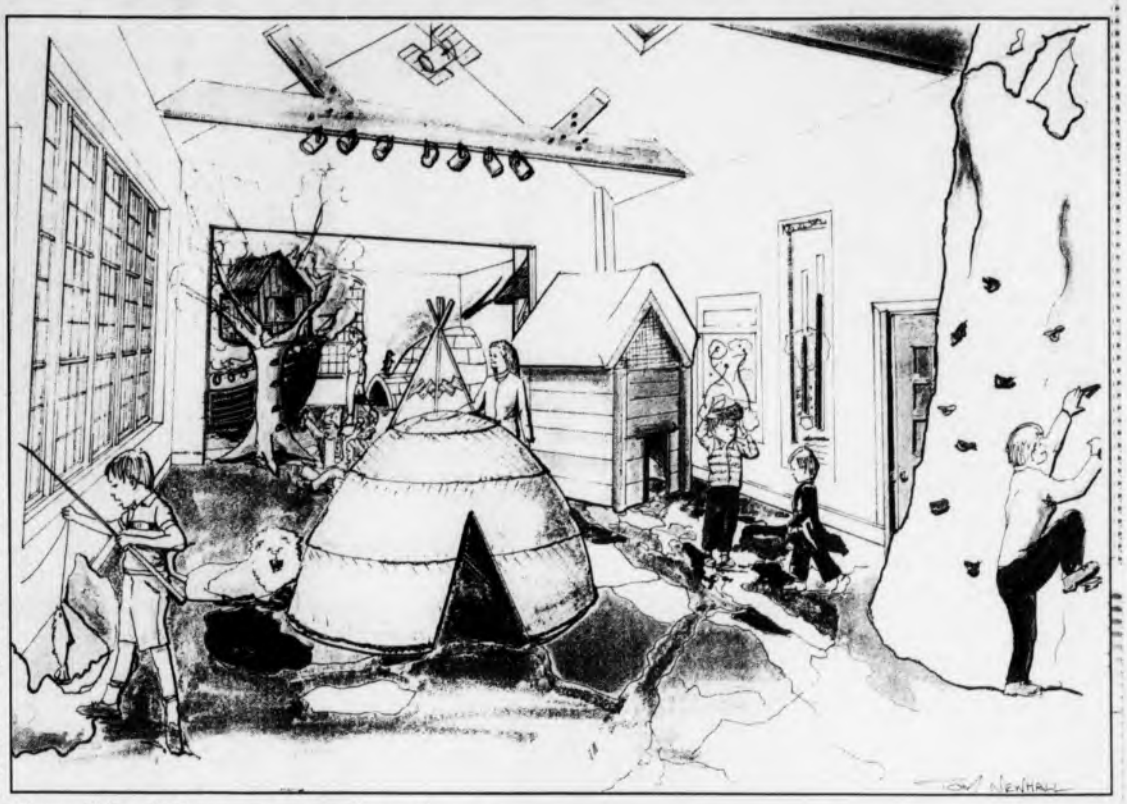
The museum is committed to raising $1 million to create Our World and already has about $300,000.

"We are right on target," Shropshire said.

She added that the museum is actually ahead of schedule on fundraising and will now being to move forward on the design and construction phase of the project which includes shaping the programs, activities, and exhibits that will fill the building.

Shropshire said she hopes the museum will open at the same time the new library does, which is slated for the summer of 2003.

If any residents are interested in learning more about the project and the development of the children's playground adjacent to the building, there will be a kick-off meeting for Our World on Monday, June 3 beginning at 10 a.m. The meeting, which centers on the playground not the museum, will be outside at the home of Leah Taylor Roy at 45 Margin St. Museum trustees are seeking the public's input on the play area.



There will be a lot for youngsters to explore in the museum, as depicted in the above illustration.

Celebrating Gulf River's history

Did you know ...

• that President Abraham Lincoln's genealogical roots trace to our Gulf River and its tributary, Bound Brook?

• that setting the line between Cohasset and Scituate down the middle of the Gulf River may have been the first "federalist" act in the "New World"?

• that people used to sail iceboats on the Gulf?

You'll learn about these and other little-known events of long ago in a slide presentation on the History of the Gulf River at the Spring Meeting of the Gulf Association Wednesday, May 29, at 7:30 p.m. at Lightkeeper's House Government Island, Cohasset Harbor.

John Hartshorne, past president of the Gulf Association and past vice president of the Cohasset Historical Society, has made a study of the fascinating history of the Gulf River, sometimes called Cohasset's and Scituate's "best kept secret." With photos taken the length and breadth of the River, he will show the remnants of water mills and salt hay harvesting that made the Gulf an artery of enterprise.

Also, Gulf Association President Jim Spellman will report results of an Association membership survey and progress in conducting a Natural Resource Inventory of the Gulf.

Members and friends of the Gulf are urged to attend this informative meeting. Attendance is free and open to all.

Beach Street lawyers argue both sides would wind its up to the house lot would require removing about 4,500 tons of the most outstanding ledge outcroppings in the area.

So worried are abutters and other interested citizens about protecting ledge, which they say gives the town its character, that not once, but twice in the past nine months they have proposed a ledge bylaw at Town Meeting that would make it harder to remove prominent outcroppings in town. Although its efforts fell short, the group did win a commitment from the Community Preservation Committee, charged with making recommendations to spend funds under the Community Preservation Act, which the town adopted last year, for up to $600,000 to buy the lot in question and two others at the site. That effort did past muster at the March Town Meeting.

But even before the stage could be set for arguments over interpretation of the zoning bylaw on Monday night, two members of the Zoning Board — Barbara Power and Mark Dunne — recused themselves because they both live on Beach Street, leaving chairman Woody Chittick, and members Ben Lacy and Anson Whealler in the role of judge and jury.

On one side was attorney Richard Henderson, who is representing another Beach Street abutter Bruce Herzfelder, and on the other side, was the attorney for Walsh, Richard A. Nylen Jr.

Here's where it gets complex. Henderson, on behalf of Herzfelder, 133 Beach St., is appealing inaction by Building Inspector Robert Egan, who failed to respond to Henderson's letter, saying construction of the driveway on the premises would require zoning board approval. Henderson says zoning relief would be needed because the driveway construction would require the removal of more than 10 cubic yards of fill off the site — the maximum allowed under the bylaw. If any more ledge were to be removed, it would require a special permit. The plans, as presented to the Conservation Commission, are silent on the issue of where the ledge is going to go, Henderson said.

He stressed during hearings on the project before the Conservation Commission, it became apparent the developer would have to remove significant ledge from the site to construct the driveway to the proposed house.

But the part of the driveway within the 100-foot buffer zone that falls under the jurisdiction of the Conservation Commission is relatively small. And Walsh, the developer, has promised the removed fill from that part of the driveway will be crushed and remain on the property.

However, Henderson was undeterred.

"Look at these plans," Henderson said. "There is no evidence the ledge will actually remain on the premises."

He also pointed out if the ledge did remain, it would affect the topography of the site and ultimately the drainage.

Nylan, lawyer for the owner, pointed out the site's engineer has filed an affidavit stating unequivocally that any ledge removed from the part of the proposed driveway under the jurisdiction of the Conservation Commission would remain on the site. It's not clear if ledge removed for the rest of the driveway would be taken away.

He pointed out the building inspector is charged with the issuance or denial of building permits based on the conformity to the zoning bylaw. The zoning board's power is limited to appeals from actions — and not inaction — of the building inspector.

Chittick said if the material were kept on site then the applicant is "home free."

But the zoning board said it is impossible to appeal an action before it has taken place. Board members said if Walsh starts removing ledge then the building inspector would issue a "Cease & Desist" action stopping the removal in its tracks.

Indicative of the seriousness that Walsh is taking the process, he hired a court reporter to record Monday's public hearing.

There were some uncomfortable moments at the start of the hearing when it wasn't clear if the court reporter could get her recorder to work. Chittick, the chairman, wanted to get underway, but Walsh asked for patience until the kinks could be worked out. At one point, Walsh asked the board not to be rude.

That remark prompted Whealler to comment sarcastically the board didn't need a lesson on proper manners.

Whealler also seemed cynical about how the project would work if the entire amount of ledge removed for the driveway remained on site.

"Is it not too much to ask to see how this miracle is going to happen?" he asked.

Henderson also argued that if the removed ledge changed the topography changed at the site, then the wetlands could be affected.

However, when the Conservation Commission approved in February a variance with conditions that could pave the way for the driveway — the commission said if zoning relief were required, the applicant would have to file for a new Notice of Intent with the Conservation Commission.

The Zoning Board closed the public hearing on Henderson's appeal and took the matter under advisement.

Common changes looked at and coordinate any changes," said Town Planner Elizabeth Harrington.

After holding a public workshop on the project and developing some thoughts on the project, it presented its initial plans to the selectmen Tuesday night.

The firm understands the plans are not complete and will hold another public design workshop on Wednesday, May 29 at 7:30 p.m. to further gather community input.

Some of the ideas floated before the selectmen were aimed at bringing the common back to its original state. This would include planting more trees on the edge, opening up the middle to create more of a sprawling feel and reconfiguring the roads that border the common.

Some of the specific recommendations include aligning Jason Road with Depot Court which would not only better traffic flow in the area but would create a larger buffer for the duck pond.

Another idea is to eliminate the turnabout in front of Town Hall and square it off, which would create more green area and additional parking space. This would not only increase parking efficiency but would allow for a larger grassy area in front of Town Hall.

There were also some ideas for the duck pond. Originally a glacial pool, the pond has become the focus of the common. The architectural firm thought creating a stone-seat wall around the pond as well as increasing the roadway buffer would enhance the area.

Selectmen were warm to most of the ideas presented but still had many questions, most of which concerned cost.

"The concepts look great but it's hard to discuss them without having the financial figures in front of us," said Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan.

During the one-hour presentation, Nancy Denig outlined this history of the common.

In the 1700s, when she described the common as a plain — the area had a few scattered residences on what is now North Main Street but was primarily used as a place for cattle to graze.

During the early 1800s the common saw more structures including the meetinghouse, which is now the Second Congregational Church. During this era Highland Avenue was also established along with a few cow paths that cut from Highland Avenue to Main Street.

In the latter half of the 19th century, there was development on the south end of the common along with a flag pole placed in the area.

In the early 1900s the common experienced significant change including the installation of electric and phone wires in the area, and the construction of Town Hall. The pond also experienced its first makeover when it was paved during these years.

CMHS students get lesson on diversity

Photography exhibit displayed in library

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Recent tragedies have impressed upon many the importance of tolerance.

From school shootings, to terrorist attacks, to the crisis in the Middle East — many agree that most of these conflicts could be avoided with teaching and understanding at an early age.

Developing a student body, which accepts and is tolerant of all types of people, is something the school administration strives for. To that end, the high school recently hosted a photography exhibit called "A Shared Heart" — portraits of people who are gay, lesbian, or transgender.

The exhibit, which was co-sponsored by the Cohasset Diversity Committee, was displayed in the high school library from May 13 - 17.

Chartis Tebbetts, a member of the School Committee, said the 38 photographs taken by Adam Mastoon serve the purpose of telling the story of the lives of young people, who grew up differently than most. The photos are accompanied with a statement by the subject which tends to be positive and life-affirming but, some detail the struggles one can face as a minority. The common thread among the pictures is how to accept one's sexuality.

"It's important our students learn about all different kinds of diversity," said Tebbetts also a member of the Diversity Committee. "Sexual orientation is a hidden difference and we want to bring it to the forefront."

Dr. Mike Gill, the health education coordinator for the school system, said and creating a comfortable learning environment is of paramount importance for all children, regardless of their sexual orientation.

"We want to help the kids realize that diversity is important," Gill said. "This was just an attempt to further those ideas."

Susan Etkind, chairman of the Diversity Committee which has been around since 1995, said the exhibit worked because the subjects in the pictures looked like any teen one would find in Cohasset High School halls.

"The school has been looking at a way to acknowledge that there is a gay presence at the school for some time," Etkind said. "This (exhibit) is something we are very excited about."

Gill said he has more diversity activities planned including a film program which was initiated by the Diversity Committee. The seventh-grade students will see "Not in Our Town", which is about a town in Montana that comes together in support of its populations experiencing prejudice and hate crimes. The eighth grade will see a movie called "A Place at the Table" about teenagers, who talk informally of their different ethnicity and cultural backgrounds. The two grades are also taking classes on diversity issues this week.

"The overall goal is for every kid to feel safe and secure while at school," Tebbetts said. "We have an opportunity to teach them respect and values and will take advantage of that."

She added this is part of the Diversity Committee's goals to instill programs in the school all year long.

"We're not just dealing with sexual diversity," she said. "We're trying to establish tolerance for racial, ethnic, religious and all kinds of differences."

Etkind said there will also be a storyteller coming to the high school to speak about the Holocaust. Jennifer Justice, a Unitarian minister, will share stories of teenagers of the Holocaust at the high school on June 5 at 9:30 a.m. and 10:30 a.m.

said she fondly remembered her days in Cohasset. She said she most vividly remembers going to the beach, sailing out of the harbor, pool hopping at night and attending shows at the Music Circus.

"I'm so proud of being from Cohasset," she said. "I miss it."

According to CBS's Web site, Vavrick-O'Brien currently works as a real estate agent in her hometown of Burlington, Vt. Before that she was self-employed and ran a small art products store and an event planning business. In 1998, she biked across the United States for the American Lung Association in memory of her father. She is divorced and has one son who had a cameo on the show.

Vavrick-O'Brien was one of 16 people selected out of 50,000 to compete for the $1 million prize.

there they go to Beechwood Cemetery and then to the Music Circus at 10:30 a.m. where the parade assembles.

Post Commander Steve Wigmore said there are three bands this year, including the Rusty Skippers and middle-high school band. The parade, which also includes Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, marches on to Central Cemetery at Joy Place, the World War I Honor Roll on the Common, the POW/MIA memorial at Depot Court and finally to Veterans Memorial Park in the harbor.

As the soldiers head down Elm Street and reach the bend just before Kimball's, emotions build. The 50 state flags and six service flags, along with the American flag, will be flying high in the wind around the Veterans Park. The grass is so green there and the harbor will be glistening in the background. The crowd also thickens as dozens cheer and applaud the veterans passing by.

At Veterans Park patriotic music will play. Ted Macklin a former Navy Seal will give the keynote speech, and the poem "In Flanders Fields" will be read, once again.

There will be references to Sept. 11, the nation's war on terrorism and to the thousands of new American soldiers in far away places, such as Afghanistan, Kosovo and Bosnia. The night before, for the first time local veterans serving one-hour shifts kept a continuous vigil from dusk to dawn at Veterans Park to honor all soldiers past and present.

Reacting to the speeches, music and setting some soldiers will wipe away tears, while others stare into the distance. Youngsters will gather around on their bicycles – and in awe of the proceedings, some will also salute. Grownups will put their hands over their hearts.

As the observances come to an end, many will make their way up Border Street to Government Island for free soft drinks, hot dogs and hamburgers, courtesy of the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation.

Cohasset veterans will visit at the legion post and share old stories.

Later, when they put their uniforms back into the closet for another year, they will be comfortable with the knowledge their town hasn't forgotten what it all means.

In Flanders Fields

by Lt. Col. John McCrae, M.D.
(1872-1918)
CANADIAN ARMY

In Flanders fields the poppies blow
Between the crosses, row on row,
That mark our place; and in the sky
The larks, still bravely singing, fly
Scarce heard amid the guns below.

We are the Dead. Short days ago
We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow,
Loved, and were loved, and now we lie
In Flanders fields.

Take up our quarrel with the foe:
To you from failing hands we throw
The torch; be yours to hold it high.
If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders fields.

PRIME TIME SURVIVOR

What does everyone think about Kathy Vavrick-O'Brien, the third-place finisher in the show, "Survivor"? She went right to the top and I think that if the luck of the draw didn't keep her out of the top two, she would have been the winner. Wouldn't it be great if she were to come to town for a visit? Her fond memories of Cohasset were so great to hear and I know that she would be happy to see how the town is doing. We will see....

BRYANT GRADUATES

The Bryant College commencement on May 19 included three Cohasset residents. Lauren Dooley and Kathryn L. Whitehouse were both awarded bachelor of science degrees in business administration with a concentration in management and Matthew I. REMEMBERING CLARK

The members of the Clark Chatterton Memorial Fund Committee would like to thank all the residents of Cohasset who have contributed to the memorial fund established in Clark's memory.

One project the Committee has undertaken (with the assistance of the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club) will be the installation of a new basketball court in the playground behind the renovated Deer Hill School — it is anticipated that it will be completed prior to this fall.

The fund also contributed to the new discus cage on Alumni Field and there will be a Life Fitness Cross Trainer exercise machine donated in his name to the new fitness center at the Cohasset Middle High School. We are hopeful that this new piece of equipment will be available for use when school opens in September.

Finally, the Committee invites all runners and walkers, young and old, to participate in the first annual "Clark's Fund Run" which is scheduled for: Saturday, June 15, at 10 a.m. The "Run/Walk" is a 3.5 mile race that begins and ends at the South Shore Music Circus. The registration fee (postmarked by June 1) is $12 and applications may be picked up at Good Sport or at the Cohasset Middle High School. Any questions should be directed to: Debbie Beal, Physical Education Teacher, Cohasset Middle High School. Late registrations (postmarked after June 1) are $15.

Any individuals or companies that would be interested in being a sponsor for this event should also contact Debbie at 781-383-6103.

TOP GIRL SCOUTS

Cohasset Girl Scouts were honored at the recent Patriot's Trail Scout Council annual meeting. Elizabeth Rankin received the prestigious Gold Award, the highest award that a Girl Scout can earn and honors scouts who demonstrates an exceptional commitment to their communities and an outstanding dedication to achievement. To earn it, a girl must complete recognitions which will help her explore careers, develop leadership potential, learn new skills, challenge her to give something of herself and make an impact on her community. She must then design and carry out a Girls Scout project. Elizabeth created a training video on how to do water testing. This video is used to train volunteers in testing procedures. The video provides a way for new volunteers to perfect their testing skills to render accurate findings that can be used by professionals and provides a long-lasting procedure that won't be modified as it passes through generations of volunteers. Also honored were graduating seniors, Brittany Carroll, Kerry Long and Jessica Stevermer.

Elizabeth Rankin received the prestigious Gold Award, the highest award that a Girl Scout can earn.

I know that many of us, myself included were very busy this past weekend with the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life walk held here in Cohasset. This was the first year that I was a team captain and I was so impressed by this event from beginning to end.

We have had several friends and family members affected by cancer and our team was in memory of two very special people who lost their battles with cancer and in honor of a very dear friend who is currently battling this dreaded disease. We also had several members of our team who are survivors themselves or have a family member dealing with cancer now.

From beginning to end, this event was done so beautifully and the constant stream of people coming to set up the sites, walk at their scheduled time and support the efforts to raise money was amazing. The opening ceremonies and survivors' lap was a true dedication to the folks who have fought and won. It also made us all think about the friends and family going through treatments right now and hope that next year, they will be walking alongside of all the survivors.

The Luminaria Ceremony held in darkness with the candles lit along the track was so emotional for everyone. It was a true time to walk in silence with your family, friends and strangers and come together in thoughts and prayers. It allowed for memories, hope and emotions to run through one's head without any interruptions whatsoever. For me, it was something I will never forget and it was definitely a walk worth remembering. As the night went on and the rain started slowly and then grew along with the wind, one thing never stopped and that was the string of constant walkers.

My team, "Team 1-4-3" walked for a few more hours before we finally decided at around 3:45 a.m. or so, to lie down for an hour because we were getting(or already got,) quite tired and wet and also because a man made it quite clear that we were a bit too loud for that time of the night. We are so sorry for that, emotions and giddiness took over. Imagine my surprise when I peeked out of our tent at 5:05 a.m. to see people walking, our team members included and more people filtering in with rain gear, umbrellas and smiles! That was all we needed to get us going again and we walked on.

When I was asked why we were still walking, I think my answer was probably the answer of many. No matter how cold or wet we were, no matter how blue my lips were at the time or how uncomfortable our wet, soggy shoes felt, it was nothing in comparison to what people go through when battling Cancer. The emotions, physical pain and day-to-day living that they go through must be so excruciating that the little bit of discomfort we were feeling was nothing. When the event was over and we were able to go home and warm up, the feeling of knowing that all of us involved, whether it was on a team, as a donator, as a behind-the-scenes person or as a walker, worked together and made a difference in the battle to raise enough funds to find a cure was a great feeling.

I know that our team, Team 1-4-3 will be back year after year to participate in such a worthy event. My hats go off to all of the participants and team members, you are all awesome! I also want to commend the walkers in the Avon Breast Cancer 3-day walk that was also held this past weekend. They had to deal with weather stronger and colder than ours and even had snow and sleet! Fantastic job to all who worked so hard!

That is all for this week. Please make sure to get me all your news and information no later than Mondays at noon.

Former resident features town in his second novel

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Turning the pages one may feel as if they're reading the Narrative History of Cohasset. The protagonist lives on Doane Street and some of the landmarks of Cohasset and Hingham serve as the setting for the book's action. But this is not the non-fiction recollection of the last 50 years in town.

Bob Maki, who lived in Cohasset for 28 years, has penned his second novel titled "The Sea's Lament".

The book follows 1,000 years beginning in the Viking era and continues to bring the reader into the 20th century and the building of submarines, and focuses on the Quincy Naval Yards.

The first part of the book follows a Swedish boat builder and his adventures on the Norway coast where Vikings capture him and his wife.

The second part of the book deals takes the protagonist through a web of espionage and sabotage on undersea vessels.

The sinking of the submarine Thresher in 1963 inspired Maki to research past naval disasters which led him to the age of the Vikings. He said he did months of research of the history of the Vikings and their ships.

Maki, who lives in Gardner after leaving Cohasset about five-years ago, also drew on his knowledge from his work in the shipping industry while writing his book.

He worked in the Navy for 11 years as an architect and designed the deckhouse of the USS Skylark, the submarine rescue boat chronicled in the second half of the book. He then worked six years at the Boston Navy Yard and another six as the chief structural engineer at Fore River Bethlehem Steel Company.

In his work with the Navy, Maki had the responsibility for the instructional integrity for everything that was built.

"It was the most interesting time of my life," Maki said.

He also worked with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers for a 23-year period during which he held supervisory engineering positions culminating as a Division Chief.

However, throughout all of his travels Maki credits Cohasset with much of the inspiration for the book.

"Cohasset had quite influence on the book. This town is in a wonderful area."

— Bob Maki, author

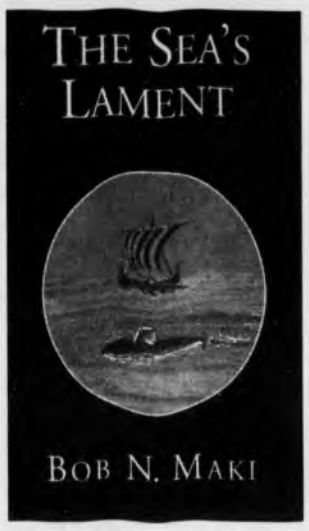
While living in town for almost three decades, Maki served on the Conservation Commission and his two children went through the Cohasset school system. He served as a commissioner for two years in which he dealt with a spectrum of problems relating to coastal and inland wetlands.

"Cohasset had quite influence on the book," he said. "This town is in a wonderful area."

Maki did some technical writing in his career but only recently discovered fiction. He wrote his first book "Briefcase", in 1996 and his current novel was published last year.

"The book is interesting and exciting," he said. "It has all the elements a book should have and has a broad range of appeal."

While Maki prides himself that his readers say they can't put down his book once they pick it up, he has had trouble marketing his novel. He described the publishing world as one of the toughest he's ever been involved with.



Bob Maki's new novel is about two proud shipbuilders separated by a millenium.

"I've had a horrendous time getting the word out," he said. "If I ever had to make my living as an author it would be impossible."

He is currently working with the Internet company Xlibris, which only will publish his work and not market it, so Maki is left to do all the editing and promoting himself.

"There's been a good deal of frustration," he said. "I've spent year after year writing to publishing companies."

Program seeks to MAKE a difference

By helping single mothers cope

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Usually it's hard to find someone willing to donate time, money and energy towards a program. Finding volunteers can often prove very difficult.

However, that's not the case with Mothers And Kids Evolving (MAKE).

The program, which pledges help for single mothers and their children whether it be fixing a light bulb or babysitting, is the brainchild of Karin Gorman, the owner of Reflections Antiques on Jerusalem Road in Cohasset.

The program boasts enough support to offer legal help, financial support, and various other services to mothers and their children.

Gorman said she has talked with many who are willing to donate time to her program, and is looking for single mothers to help.

For example, Gorman is currently making bumper stickers that say MAKE a Difference, and after telling the company what the program was about, received a 20 percent discount.

"I have a group of people ready to help someone," she said. "I'm just waiting for people to come to me and tell me they know someone who needs our help."

While it's easy to sympathize with any person experiencing the hurt associated with a divorce, Gorman has first-hand knowledge. Two years ago Gorman discovered her husband was having an affair and knows the pain and depression a divorce can bring.

She was devastated. She said there were moments of helplessness that were frightening.

"I had a year of turmoil that really sent me to the ends of the earth," she said. "But I learned more in that one year about people and how they deal with relationships then I ever had before."

She admitted that when she got walked out on her sense of self worth was gone.

"I used to believe in marriage," she said. "But now I doubt it."

She felt herself occasionally leaving dirty dishes in the sink and discovered other subtle signs that she was upset.

But her pain was compounded when she met a person whose life was in the same type of upheaval. She felt the woman didn't realize how low she had let her life fallen.

"Her life was so saddened," she said. "She had given up."

Gorman said she could relate to the hurt, divorced woman.

"I saw a woman falling apart," she recalled. "I said I'm going to make a difference."

Gorman went over to her new friend's house and painted her walls, and did various household chores to help brighten her spirits.

"She couldn't believe that someone would make that effort," she said.

After thinking about the day, Gorman how much she would have appreciated that kind of support when going through her painful times.

That's what inspired MAKE.

Her vision for the group is a small organization that focuses on one woman at a time. She said she would hope to help 12 women a year.

"We want to try and alleviate their pain," she said. "We can be a shoulder they lean on."

Gorman said MAKE would be a way to not only help mothers land on their feet, but would also focus on the children.

She said while the legal system can provide child support for a family, which is not always paid on time, it fails to provide a moral foundation for the children.

"We sometimes forget that the kids are most important," Gorman said. "They should be watching people around them who are strong and not falling apart."

If you are interested in either supporting MAKE or referring a family to the program, you can reach Gorman at Reflections Antiques at 781-383-6465.

In case of emergency...

Seniors offered 'RUOK' program

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Sometimes something as simple as a telephone call can ensure the safety of those in town, especially senior citizens. By assuring that a senior is healthy enough to answer the phone offers a sense of security to their loved ones.

The "Are You OK?" program, sponsored by the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office out of Braintree, is set up to ensure the safety of isolated individuals. It is a voluntary sign-up computer/telephone reassurance system that checks the well-being of senior citizens or people with restrictions.

The program is run in about 23 of the county's 28 towns and recently came to Cohasset. There will be an information session on Friday, May 24 to discuss the benefits of the program and offer applications to those who are interested.

Kathy Bryanton, director of the Council of Elder Affairs in town, said if friends or relatives are concerned about a senior being alone this offers a way to make sure they are safe.

"I absolutely believe people benefit from this program," she said. "It's been proven to be effective."

The "Are You OK?" safety program is run from a computer in Braintree which is constantly monitored. The computer makes calls to the almost 200 people in Norfolk County seven days a week, 365 days a year, on the hour starting at 6 a.m. and continuing until noon.

If no one picks up the phone the computer will call back five minutes later and if there is still no answer the local police department will be notified to send over a cruiser. If the line is busy, the computer will call back up to three times in 15 minutes.

"I absolutely believe people benefit from this program."
— Kathy Bryanton, CEA director

Cheryl Bambery, the deputy sheriff who monitors the computer, said the program has already been responsible for 15 "saves" since it began in April. A save is when a senior doesn't answer the phone because of an illness or injury and is discovered by local safety officials in time to rescue them.

"We never take anything for granted," she said. "We're just trying to make sure seniors are able to get help if they need it."

Bambery, whose voice seniors hear on the 24-second phone call, said the program has been a success but hopes more people will become involved.

"We started with 20 people and now have 10 times that," she said. "But we could accommodate a lot more."

Bambery added many seniors often just want to talk with someone. She said sometimes they won't answer the phone and when she calls them back, they're happy for human contact.

"They can be lonely," she said. "In many cases they've outlived all of their friends and relatives."

Carol Barrett, the outreach coordinator for CEA, said she had looked at installing a similar program just for the town but the equipment was too expensive. When the county initiated it, she jumped on the opportunity.

"It's wonderful if someone is homebound," she said.

The program is funded by the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office and does not cost residents or participants anything. The only requirement is to have a phone and to be willing to fill out a waiver prior to starting the program.

Along with extolling the virtues of "Are You OK?" the breakfast reception this Friday will also address two other programs the CEA is championing. One is called "File of Life" and it encourages older residents to have a small file attached to their refrigerator that includes their medical history.

"That way if there was an emergency the paramedics would have quick, easy access to the information they need," Bryanton said.

The other program is called "Beacon" and offers a flashing bulb to citizens so police or fire vehicles can more quickly locate a home in case of an emergency.

House budget restores money for elder programs

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

For the first time in a long time, there is some good news coming from Beacon Hill concerning the budget. The version the House recently approved included an appropriation of $8.5 million to elder services that was not originally in the budget.

Ed Flynn, director of South Shore Elder Services, said his organization was experiencing some bleak times in recent months but is starting to recover.

"It's like night and day from January to now," he said. "We went through a tough time but are turning it around now."

Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, attended the selectmen's meeting on Tuesday to discuss budgetary issues concerning elder affairs. He concurred with Flynn and said the future is looking brighter.

"We were able to put a lot more money in the program," he said. "The Council on Elder Affairs in town is doing such a great job and now should be able to continue to offer great programs."

The CEA and South Shore Elder Services are looking for more money to expand, and create more programs.

"The Council on Elder Affairs in town is doing such a great job and now should be able to continue to offer great programs."
— State Rep. Garrett Bradley

One of its current focuses is on the Community Choices program which tries to provide elders with the option of staying at home rather than being put in a nursing home. It is currently looking at 450 are seniors who are in imminent danger of being sent to nursing homes.

"We want to keep people comfortable as long as possible," Flynn said. "It's beneficial for everyone for seniors to stay at home."

Other programs, including "Are You OK?" (see related story), "File of Life', and "Beacon", will receive extra funding.

Kathy Bryanton, director of CEA in town, said the money comes at a necessary time. She said the organization in town needs more part and full-time help as well as new vans for transporting seniors to and from medical visits. Even if the group is unable to find the manpower to support the programs, Bryanton said it will still continue.

"It's always been the philosophy of Cohasset to provide as much service to our seniors through volunteerism as possible," she said. "That's what we aim to do."

Carol Barrett, outreach coordinator for CEA, said any extra money will help.

"Anything we can get to help defray our costs will be very appreciated," she said.

Bellotti breakfast

Norfolk County Sheriff, Michael Bellotti will celebrate the first anniversary of "Are You OK?" the telephone reassurance program for seniors with an "open breakfast forum" prepared by Anna's Gourmet Club on Friday May 24 at 9 a.m. at St. Anthony's Parish Center, South Main and Summer Streets.

Meet the staff of the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office and the staff of Cohasset Elder Affairs.

Reservations are required and may be made by calling 781-383-9112.

GUEST EDITORIAL

A Memorial Day reflection

One year ago, we were a nation at peace, but not now. A short year ago, Blue Star Service Banners were lost in the memories of a half-century ago, but not now.

On Memorial Day 2002, I see more and more Blue Star Service Banners in front windows of houses and businesses across America. A banner reminds us that a loved one from that family is serving in the U.S. Armed Forces, fighting terrorism in Operation Enduring Freedom and providing homeland defense. Unfortunately, Gold Star Banners are replacing some of the blue.

Today's men and women sent into harm's way differ little from the doughboys who fought in the trenches of France, the GIs who stormed the beaches at Normandy or the troops who bought inches of land with blood at Korea's Chosin Reservoir.

Indeed, they are no different than the millions of men and women who have answered the clarion call throughout American history. As did those before them, today's men and women whom we honor did their duty. Regrettably, we must now add 3,000 more names to the list of our honored dead.

Some of the honored dead were in the Armed Forces, but some were not. Each was on the frontlines of the terrorist assault on America. All lost their lives Sept. 11 or the days following. It is fitting that, as we remember the military men and women who died in service to America, we also — just this once — remember as well the first casualties of the War on Terrorism. They are also American heroes who died in the line of duty. They gave their all in service to their country as surely as if they had been on the frontlines of Afghanistan.

Again, young Americans, wearing the uniforms of our armed forces, are fighting in a war without borders and without clearly identified combatants. Some of them have given the supreme sacrifice for our nation. We are thankful that we are a nation that does not forget…that we are a people who remember and honor the memory of those who died fighting the enemies of the United States — wherever and whenever they threaten.

On this Memorial Day I ask all citizens of this great land to remember the sacrifice of more than one million Americans whose memory we honor today.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Points about youth sports are disputed

TO THE EDITOR:

It is unclear to me the point of the letter "Big Message, low turnout". Mr. Bell's letter is all over the map with complaints about volunteers, civil engineering, legal documents, Cohasset Youth Sports and presumably youth sports everywhere. The letter does include the minor concession that "the system isn't all bad", however, the overall message of the letter seems to be that desperate improvements are required and the tone implies an axe to grind.

Everyone can always agree that there is room for improvement. However, with two children participating in Cohasset Youth Sports my family's experiences are overwhelmingly positive and my impression is that the system is excellent. Contrary to what Mr. Bell says my children's experiences in youth sports included plenty of "fun" as well as every other emotion, including disappointment. It is after all, sports.

Finally, the "facts" in the letter are hilarious. Who would have thought that tripling the number of fields would triple the number of injuries? Moreover, the 70 percent dropout rate statistic gives as an indication of the creditability of the other points that are made in the letter. It is a meaningless and phony statistic. I would argue that 70 percent of children drop out of whatever they have been doing prior to age 13, not just sports. What is the continuing participation rate for bicycle riding or the Boy Scouts?

Hamster houses

TO THE EDITOR:

This is a thank you to the recyclying transfer facility people who have helped me out with my new hamster, Carmel. I have been saving my allowance to buy a hamster for a while. When I told Larry at the dump, he said that he will look for a cage at the boutique for me so that I wouldn't have to spend my money on a new cage. He not only found me a cage but it also had all the supplies I needed to get started. After a few weeks of enjoying Carmel, I noticed she was sleeping a lot. In a day or two, I checked on Carmel, only to find 12 new pink hairless babies cuddling with their mommy.

Well, we eventually needed to get a new cage because my sister, Brigette, wanted to keep a baby. On our way to "Show and Tell" with the 13 hamsters, Carmel, Bill, Amy Snowball, Pearl...., we stopped at the dump to introduce them to Larry and explain our situation. We would like him to be on the lookout for another cage because Brigette wanted to keep Pearl. Brigette's not good about saving her allowance, and didn't have any money for a cage (she's only five).

Larry greeted us and happily said he would be on the lookout. Sure enough, he found Brigette a cage and presented it to her just in time. Now Pearl has a new home. We are grateful for the guys who work so hard at the transfer facility. They are always cheerful and helpful. We love the boutique and come home with treasures after every visit.

Thanks you!!

Wrong focus on makeup issue

TO THE EDITOR:

Your May 16 editorial "Girls will be girls," continues to focus the debate on outward appearance as the independent variable responsible for a disrupted learning environment. In the final analysis, whether the feature is form (fashion) or function (to conform or to differentiate), it's not about our differences; it's about respect. Children, even more importantly adults, whether in classrooms, crowded highways, issue-divisive meetings, or sporting events will be more positively affected by observing, acknowledging, and reinforcing mutual respect in all our interactions.

As former Secretary General and Nobel Peace prize winner U Thant stated, "Every human being, of whatever origin, of whatever station, deserves respect. We must each respect others even as we respect ourselves," Or, as Aretha put it, "What you want — baby I got it — What you need — you know I got it — all I'm asking is for a little respect." Either way, let's try to focus less on façade and more on foundation.

LIBRARY CORNER

Library of America

Come into the Paul Pratt Memorial Library for a look at the Library of America Collection displayed next to the main desk. It's a wonderful collection of writing that will keep you busy throughout the summer.

The Library of America is the current literary Hall of Fame. Since 1982, 129 volumes have appeared, canonizing authors from James Baldwin to Dawn Powell, Sarah Orne Jewett to Richard Wright, and topics from "Slave Narratives" to "The Debate on the U.S. Constitution." There are two volumes of World War II writing, two of American poetry, two collections of crime novels ("American Noir of the 1930s and 40s" and "American Noir of the 1950s"); and of course, Faulkner, Fitzgerald, Hawthorne, Wharton, Willa Cather, 12 volumes of Henry Jams (so far), six Twain, two Tennessee Williams, three Eugene O'Neills, Lincoln, Washington, Franklin, Hamilton, Grant, Sherman, and even the naturalists William Bartram, Muir, and John J. Audubon. The list is Borgesian in its delightful, arcane inclusiveness, and stirring as a roll call of American writing. (Luke Salisbury, The Boston Sunday Globe May 5, 2002).

Pining for those college summers

TWENTY SOMETHING

EVAN SCHIFF

I used to look forward to this time of year from the day classes began in September.

It was always a period that demanded concentration on one thing — having fun.

Throughout my life summer has been a time to explore and reflect, have new adventures and visit far off lands.

That won't be happening this year.

This year I'll be doing the same thing I've been doing for the last eight-months, researching, interviewing and writing stories. This is in stark contrast to my exploits of previous summers.

I've gone on an outdoor adventure in the Pacific Northwest where I learned the ropes of hiking, white-water rafting and climbing. The following summer I joined another expedition, this time to Alaska, where I honed those skills and added sea kayaking and canoeing to my list of outdoor accomplishments.

After that, I was a counselor at a summer camp for two years, and then trekked cross-country and did a stint in San Diego, where surfing became my life. Then, to cap it all off, I spent almost two months backpacking around Europe learning about various countries, their people, and myself.

I understand I'm more fortunate than most to have had the opportunity to travel to so many places. The incredible adventures, which I've had, account for a different kind of education — one that can't be obtained at any institution of higher learning. I was lucky to meet people from all over the world and experience different cultures.

However, this summer marks the first time I'll be working in a professional environment. I won't be in any exotic locales, I'll be in the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square.

There will be no encounters with black bears, no kids to discipline, no Eiffel Tower sightings, and no cuisine from Italy. There will be no Spanish carnivals, the waves here won't compare to their California counterparts, and there will be no experience quite like Amsterdam.

But there will be plenty of 9-5 days, an abundance of meetings covered and thousands of words written. There will be zoning issues explained, peoples' lives researched and hours spent in front of the computer. Don't get me wrong, I enjoy my job more than most I've had, but the sudden confrontation with the "real world" is shocking.

This isn't going to be the kind of summer I remember fondly from my youth.

This isn't going to be the kind of summer I remember fondly from my youth.

I'm starting to feel like growing up coincides with losing one's freedom, putting dreams and hopes on hold, and becoming wildly unentertaining.

I'm sure I'll further my career and expand my portfolio by working diligently through the suffocating heat of the summer, but this can't compare to the lessons learned from the people one meets in a hostel in a remote village in the Swiss Alps.

It makes me wonder, do we stop playing because we become older or do we become older when we stop playing? It's a tough duality to juggle.

As much as I love Bob Dylan, it's tough to believe his "Forever Young" mantra. I'm looking forward to growing older and becoming wiser and eventually raising a family, but at what expense? Why does the carefree nature of youth have to be supplanted by the numbing monotony of adulthood? I'm sure many argue that it doesn't, but as one currently experiencing this transformation I must say it feels that way.

I realize there's no stopping the process of becoming an adult. I also know that with added responsibility eventually comes greater reward.

However, I feel at this stage in life, people should only be beginning to explore the possibilities before them, not settling down on one. If there was ever a time to go for it all and fail, it's now. But that wouldn't be the conventional thing to do.

I'm told I need to put in my time and pay my dues. My parents constantly reinforce the notion that I need to be starting to build my résumé.

But is what I'm going to be losing more valuable than what's gained?

Don't I have the better part of the next 60 years to work on that? Shouldn't I still be frolicking in the Mediterranean or pummeling wayward campers?

I think society has it all backwards — students should be studying hard over the summer, learning all the necessary information they'll need in life — and professionals should be taking three-month holidays in order to recuperate for the coming year.

That way, it would be a reward for those who have worked hard and not an expected break for lackadaisical students.

People would be looking forward to summer and not dreading its arrival.

Rush hour atop Mount Everest

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I am told that there were 54 people on the summit of Mount Everest last Thursday.

And at least one more was on his way, accompanied by a camera crew from National Geographic Magazine, delayed, no doubt, by rush hour traffic on the South Col.

Does Dunkin' Donuts know that there is a place on this earth where 54 people can gather without a coffee machine or glazed honey-dipped in sight?

When I was young, and ice covered most of the earth, the summit of the world's highest mountain was as unattainable as Babe Ruth's record of 60 home runs in one season.

Then came the New Zealand beekeeper Edmund Hillary and Sherpa guide, Tenzing Norkay, who first staggered to the 29,035-foot summit in 1953, took a few pictures and came down.

"Well, we've knocked the (expletive) off!" Hillary told his companions, waiting at Camp 8.

Their feat so captured world acclaim that Hillary was knighted and set off on a lecture tour across the Europe and the United States and Tenzing was awarded a medal and lunch with the king of Nepal.

Tenzing's grandson, Tashi Wangchuk Tenzing, was one of the 54 atop the mountain last week, while Hillary's son, Peter, was trekking to the top over his father's old route with the camera crew in tow.

Since that first climb in 1953, the world's highest mountain has been conquered 1,493 times by climbers.

Since that first climb in 1953, the world's highest mountain has been conquered 1,493 times by climbers, including Appa Sherpa and Ang Rita Sherpa, who have reached the top 12 and 10 times respectively.

It was only part of the job to them, their job being to carry the visiting climbers' sustenance and equipment and keep them from falling into a crevasse on the way.

The 54 who shared the summit last Thursday will be lucky if they don't get a ticket for parking their things at Camp 8 too long while the next commuter train to the top was passing through.

So many parties have climbed to the top of Everest, in fact, that a team of Sherpas, organized last year to clean up the slopes, collected four tons of trash, including tent poles and oxygen bottles left by climbers.

The Nepalese Sherpas, who have lived within sight of the mountain since time began, call it "Chomolungma," or "The Goddess Mother of the World."

But the British colonials who ruled in India named it for one of theirs, George Everest, who never came within 500 feet of the mountain but mapped it for the Great Trigonometrical Survey of India.

He figured it was 29,002 feet, probably the highest in the world. Since then it has either grown or has been recalculated to be 29,035 feet.

The great romantic figure in the story of Mount Everest is George Leigh Mallory, the Brit who was a member of the first three attempts to reach the top in 1921, 1922 and 1924.

It was he who coined the phrase that best describes the sport. Asked why he climbed a mountain, Mallory answered: "Because it's there."

Mallory and a companion, Sandy Irvine, were last seen as two dark dots in the snow, moving within reach of the top; then the weather closed in and they were never seen again alive.

Did they reach the top and lose their lives coming down?

Seventy-five years later, Mallory's body was found where he had fallen. His climbing tools were found, too, all but the vest-pocket camera with film that might have proven he and Irvine were the first to the top.

And now nearly 1,500 have done it, including 54 in one day. Come to think of it, the Babe's record didn't last, either.

HEALTH NOTES

Why hand washing is so critical

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The following is a message which the board passes out at restaurants during regular inspections. The information, for the most part, applies equally well to those at home trying to lessen the transmission of bacterial infection and sickness. Just think about all the things ones hands touch, and what might adhere to them. Here's the message in its entirety:

"Okay, so you've heard it before. But for food handlers, the point can not be made often enough: hand washing is the single-most important means of preventing the spread of infection. Simple acts like blowing your nose, using the toilet or scratching your face can contaminate hands with potentially deadly bacteria. Those germs can be spread to food if you fail to wash your hands frequently and thoroughly. Here's a little refresher course on hand washing requirements for food workers.

When must hands be washed?

- Before preparing foods or putting on gloves
- After touching human body parts (other than clean arms or hands)
- After using the toilet
- After caring for or touching animals
- After coughing, sneezing, using a tissue or handkerchief, using tobacco, eating or drinking
- After engaging in any activities that might contaminate the hands, like taking out garbage, handling soiled utensils or equipment, handling cleaning chemicals
- During food preparation when switching from working with raw to ready-to-eat foods

Where must hands be washed?

If you have to remove a mop or food scraps from the basin in order to wash your hands, you're at the wrong sink. The Food Code unequivocally states that hand washing sinks must be dedicated to the task at hand (so to speak). As of 2001, changes to the Food Code require hand washing posters and stickers to be displayed at sinks and will permit the use of automatic hand-washing devices. What should be used for hand washing?

The Food Code calls for hand washing lavatories to be equipped with liquid, powder or bar soap. Nail brushes and sanitizing solution are also recommended. Hand sanitizes are fine provided they are used after hands are washed, rinsed and dried. Lavatories should also contain disposable or clean cloth towels or heated air blowers."

House gives Clean Elections a bath

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

Recap and analysis of state government for the week ending May 17.

"Gee, I hope we don't get $23 million."

Not a phrase you'd expect to be bandied about much at the Statehouse this week, as advocates for programs and agencies competed in a version of "Survivor" more serious and real than the minutely-edited, focus group-approved version that airs on CBS.

But not implausible, either, given what the representatives got hung up on Wednesday night (May15): a proposal diverting $23 million in the Clean Elections fund to public employee contracts.

In their continuing battle against public campaign financing, House leaders have repeatedly tried to drain money placed in the fund in past years and put it in other accounts. They've never succeeded, just as they have never funded or repealed the law, as ordered to do by the state's highest court. But they keep trying.

Each time, advocates have been in a strange position – wanting their projects funded, but not wanting to be associated with the dismantling of the system voters approved. "It makes them feel very uncomfortable and queasy," said veteran leftie lobbyist Judy Meredith.

In the end, the House did vote 139-12 to raid the Clean Elections fund – a diversion considered unlikely to make it through the Senate, and therefore, another in the long series of symbolic anti-Clean Elections gestures the House has begun taking almost as an institutional compulsion. It remained to be seen how much the raid would undermine the repair Speaker Thomas Finneran had done to the House's image by orchestrating a deliberative, inclusive, democratic process of constructing and considering the budget.

Meanwhile, lurking in the budgetary currents is the knowledge that the Big Dig isn't finished. Sunday's grotesquely organized opening of the Zakim-Bunker Hill bridge was a reminder of why politicians on Beacon Hill are very, very edgy about how the project is being managed and what new overruns they might confront in its final stages.

Signage, personnel and security were all but non-existent during what was supposed to move the public image of the project forward. The result was exactly the type of horrific traffic situation managers of the Big Dig claim they're solving with the project, which has become a national scandal via the kind of construction errors and extra costs that marred the bridge.

Turnpike chairman Matthew Amorello said they expected about 35,000 people to take the Mother's Day tour. About 200,000 did. After the criticism and negative press, the turnpike announced plans for a second open house, seeming to forget the reason so many people came to the first one was that it had been sold as a "once in a lifetime opportunity."

You don't have to look too hard to find a rep or senator who's worried that the next fiscal crisis is going to be about the Central Artery, and this week some of them did something about it. The problem was, they couldn't agree what "something" should look like.

Suburban legislators say a gas tax increase would be a fairer and less painful way to cover the cost of the project than toll hikes that disproportionately hit their constituents. But instead of one bill, they filed two, unable to agree on whether a gas tax hike should be implemented or only studied. The conflicting legislation was a sign that the next chapter in Commonwealth bookkeeping could be as complex and contentious as the current one.

This was mostly a week about money.

House leaders have repeatedly tried to drain money placed in the fund in past years and put it in other accounts.

The budget numbers

The House started the week (of May 13) having added $144 million to the $21.8 billion austerity budget released by Ways and Means. By week's end, the House had brought the bottom line back to $22.9 billion, by spending the entire $1.065 billion tax hike approved May 2. A play-by play of the week:

Monday: The House appropriated $456.3 million. In addition to $321.8 million for public education, the House approved $60.1 million for state employee health insurance costs, $42 million for public health programs, $19.4 million for state-subsidized child care, $7.6 million for social services, $3.4 million for state administration, and $2 million for veterans' services, including soldiers' homes.

Tuesday (May 14): Public safety accounts received $86.3 million, local aid $83.3 million, K-12 received another $73 million, higher education $69.3 million, and libraries $3.9 million. In all, another $315.7 million was tacked on to the budget. Wednesday (May 15): The House appropriated approximately $51 million for judicial, transportation and environmental accounts and consumer affairs. Thursday (May 16): The House approved the Clean Elections Fund diversion, and added $67 million to Medicaid.

Lawmakers focused on how much they were restoring to the budget, and understandably made little mention of how much they are cutting to make sure the bottom line on next year's budget is less than $100 million larger than this year's spending blueprint.

Due to soaring fixed costs in some areas, the House agreed to cut more than 30,000 people off Medicaid, cut services to the mentally ill and mentally retarded, reduce early childhood and adult education programs, and increase waiting lists for elder home care. That's just a small sampling of cuts lawmakers made despite the massive tax increase they passed to prevent even deeper spending reductions.

This and that

- Finneran put his members in an unexpected caucus Monday. Observers wondered why, and it turned out he had to talk about new revenue numbers. They were awful: the state collected $170 million less than it expected in the first half of May, and the projected budget deficit for fiscal 2002 – never mind the '03 plan – is now $400 million.
- A few weeks ago – in fact, a few days ago – passage of the $689 million recovery budget that cleared the Senate Thursday would have arguably been considered the end of the fiscal 2002 problem. That changed with the rotten news about May revenues. Still, the legislation's passage did show that Republicans and Democrats, the governor and the Legislature, could work together and fix things. Unfortunately, they keep breaking. The recovery budget takes money out of a variety of rainy day, capital reserve and other set-aside accounts, and slows down the erasure of a long-term deficit in the pension fund for state workers. Leaders say they're dipping deeper into reserves than they'd like, but have few choices.
- After serving three and half years in the House, Reps. Robert Nyman and Walter Timilty got around to their maiden speeches Tuesday. Both spoke on education, with Nyman emphasizing school building assistance, as the House restored funding for local schools.
- Senate President Thomas Birmingham told reporters financial pressure on the turnpike authority, which runs the Big Dig, would be eased if Massport paid for the Ted Williams Tunnel. That could limit toll increases, Birmingham said. But Massport's spokesman said the authority wants to stay focused on running a secure post-9/11 Logan Airport.
- Gun owners testified for legislation subjecting the attorney general's regulatory powers to legislative review. Speaking before the Commerce and Labor Committee Wednesday, pro-gun lobbyists said Massachusetts AG's have been too aggressive using the powers to stem gun sales. But AG Thomas Reilly said the AG's have to use all the legitimate weapons, so to speak, to keep guns out of the hands of kids.
- Story of the week: Passage of the budget, which meant spending the tax increase, and foreshadowing more inter-branch wrangling over Clean Elections.

Craig Sandler writes for the Statehouse News Service.

Annual barbecue on Memorial Day

The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation invites everyone for hamburgers, hot dogs, soft drinks or coffee immediately following the Memorial Day Parade on May 27, at Bancroft Hall on Government Island.

The non-profit Lightkeepers Corporation was established in 1991 to renovate a former two-family lightkeepers' residence, no longer used as such because of automation of Minot's Light, and convert it into a function room for community use. The building is leased from the town but maintained and operated by the Lightkeepers Corporation.

The generosity of Cohasset residents and others provided the funds for renovation. Operating and maintenance expenses, and reserves for capital replacements or improvements, are recovered from rental of two apartments on the second floor, and from fees charged to non-residents for use of the function room facilities. Cohasset residents may use the facilities for a nominal fee, and non-profit organizations at no charge.

This will be the sixth year that CLC has hosted Memorial Day attendees in recognition of the generosity of our supporters and we expect to serve over 1000 people again.

Cohasset and the 39th anniversary of the Battle of Bunker Hill

By Lou Eaton
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The third volume of the Cohasset Town History is scheduled to become available in June of this year and the Committee responsible for publication has thought to publish a few articles, courtesy of the Cohasset Mariner, about local history to stimulate interest in matters historical even though not related to the period of 1950 to 2000 covered by Volume III.

In June of 1814 there was an episode in the history of Cohasset that many present day residents haven't ever heard about even though it is pretty thoroughly covered in Volume I of the Town History authored by the turn-of- the-20th century pastor of the Second Congregational Church, the Rev. E. Victor Bigelow. So let me tell you a little more about it.

You probably know that the War of 1812 was exceedingly unpopular in New England and was economically disastrous for Cohasset. After the British blockade of American ports took effect in 1813, the total catch from Cohasset's fishing fleet was 451 barrels which was only one tenth of the annual amount in the years preceding the war. By the spring of 1814 a British frigate was "harrying the shores of Massachusetts Bay" burning fishing vessels when they were captured. The coast of Maine, which was then a part of Massachusetts, was similarly raided. According to Bigelow, the Cohasset fishing fleet was unable to stir from harbor and 27 vessels were taken up into the Gulf and scuttled and sunk to prevent them from being burned by the enemy. Several Cape Cod towns paid ransoms to escape destruction of their property - Wellfleet $2,000, Brewster $4,000 and Eastham $1,200, according to Bigelow. Cohasset's fishermen's loss in the summer of 1814 was total and in addition the little packet they sailed to Boston was taken by the British.

In early June 1814, Scituate Harbor was raided by a landing party of British Marines sent in from two warships off shore, described by Bigelow as a "flotilla of barges" and they burned the shipping found in the harbor (a "barge" was a long narrow boat usually rigged for 10 oars and normally carried on the deck of larger men of war). The vessels involved were apparently a 74 gun ship-of-the-line, the Bulwark, and a frigate. Between them, they probably carried about 150 marines.

You probably know that the War of 1812 was exceedingly unpopular in New England and was economically disastrous for Cohasset.

A messenger brought word of this to Cohasset's Peter Lothrop, Captain of the Town Militia early in the morning of June 16. "He leaped from his bed and without hat or coat, mounting a horse without a saddle, rode through our village and roused the slumbering inhabitants." His local militia' numbering about 130 were ordered to "repair immediately, armed and equipped to the Cohasset Meeting House to await further orders." They were advised that the British were only awaiting a favorable tide to come in to Cohasset Harbor.

Bigelow had the benefit of having the diary of Thomas Stoddard (1787-1854) a portion of which appears in the Narrative History pages 345 to 349 telling of his participation in the affair. Excerpts from his account will follow:

"At noon of that day, we all assembled at the meeting house at one o'clock, all enrolled men composing one company of militia numbering about 130: Peter Lothrop, Captain; John Beale, 1st Lieut.; Henry Prentice, 2nd Lieut.; every man well equipped with ball, cartridge and provision. We were marched to Hominy Point, where we found a trench dug about two feet deep, the dirt thrown fronting the water. Into this we were marched and ordered to remain ready for action: a miserable defense, truly. Here we all remained until after sunset....About 10 o'clock....men in a boat came for a sloop from Plymouth, which the enemy had driven into Cohasset, having obtained permission of the Commodore to take her to Plymouth. They reported the force intended to attack Cohasset at 400 men in 11 barges, with 10 pieces of artillery.

During the afternoon and evening of this day, there arrived at the head of the harbor, two companies from Hingham, two companies from Weymouth, one company of artillery from Weymouth, one company of artillery from Randolph and the Hingham Rifle Company; which with the Cohasset Company, would number about 600 effective men, all under the command of Colonel Webb of Weymouth. The out-of-town companies were quartered in the best possible manner as circumstances would admit. At dawn of the following day, the cannon awakened those who might be fortunate enough to get some sleep, however, few their number might be. The drums beat the reveille, a hasty breakfast was prepared and at 6 a.m. the whole camp was in marching order for review and inspection. This day was the Sabbath: no church bell rang. This day companies of artillery, infantry, and riflemen were constantly coming in from the neighboring towns. The hills and high rocks around were covered with anxious spectators both male and female. The inhabitants were busily employed cooking for the soldiers and packing up their valuables in readiness in case the enemy should land to destroy the town, which he had threatened in case of resistance.

At 9 a.m. upwards of 1,200 men were stationed at different points of defense near the Cove. It was now high water. The enemy in 11 barges and sloop tender, hove in sight off the Glades. When they had a position so as to look into the Cove, they lay on their oars for observation. They dispatched the tender to the westward to reconnoiter the shore; several officers landed at the Glades from a barge, also to reconnoiter. All was now perfect stillness and anxiety. The officers of each company were encouraging men to fight manfully, and in case they should desert in time of action, they were told they would be immediately shot down. The American flag was displayed from various posts where the troops were stationed At 11 a.m. a signal was made from the Bulwark for the barges to return to the ships. The attack was withdrawn in consequence of their observing such a superior force to oppose them.

"The troops remained at their posts through the day, expecting the barges to return the nest high water. A strong guard was posted at different points. A strong boom had been placed across from Hominy Point to the Bassing Beach and every preparation for defense was complete.

The town presented the appearance of military camp. Several bands of music were occasionally playing, relieved by the drum and fife. The plain around the meeting-house was occupied as the grand parade.

On the morning of the 20th the ships weighed anchor and stood to the eastward. All the troops, excepting one Hingham and one Weymouth company, returned to their respective homes."

Stoddard's diary describes his continued six weeks guard duty at the Cove quartered in the store of Elisha Doane, Esq. on his wharf. He further tells of a draft from Captain Lothrop's company of 10 men to join a force of about a 1,000 militia and two companies of U.S. troops at Fort Independence in Hull; in all 1,200 men in the fall. "Winter closed the campaign at Cohasset; the company of drafted men were disbanded." As Bigelow notes, "The owners (of the 27 fishing vessels) felt fortunate with their escape from depredations when they knew what other towns had lost."

The great good news of the signing of the Treaty of Ghent ending the War of 1812, which was signed on Christmas Day, 1814, reached Cohasset in the middle of January 1815 and was greeted with enormous jubilation. However, "the rigors of winter prevented that activity and stir of business which would have otherwise occurred on the reception of the joyful news "But on Feb. 22," the anniversary of the birthday of the immortal Washington" was combined with the celebration of the return of peace and inhabitants throughout the land observed a day of public rejoicing. That spring "our dismantled vessels were again fitted out for their voyages, as many as possible, and their industry commenced the steady increase which lasted many years." "Cohasset was never so dangerously near to the furies of war as it was on June 17, 1814, When the British frigates lay off our harbor and 11 barges of British soldiers attempted to destroy our town."

Bradley supports MADD summit

As underage drinking continues to threaten the lives of young people and alcohol remains the number one drug problem among youth in America; high school teens from across the state gathered earlier this month to discuss the serious issue of underage drinking and developed solutions to the growing problem at the Massachusetts Youth Summit to Prevent Underage Drinking organized by Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD).

The Summit took place May 5-7 at the Waltham Westin Hotel. Supported by Representative Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, the student delegates held a press conference at the Statehouse in Room B1 at 10:30 a.m. on the final day to announce policy recommendations agreed to during the Summit. They then lobbied legislators, such as Bradley, to consider their recommendations as potential changes to Massachusetts' law. The delegates were grouped randomly with teens from different areas of the state into several "action pacts" in which they participated in various activities and discussions that allowed the teens to share commonalties, differences and personal experiences.

The Summit was set up so that the 90 teens gathered together at eight general sessions over the three-day period and then broke up into small action pacts with trained facilitators to further discuss the session topics. Each general session focused on a specific issue relating to underage drinking such as "Power of Youth To Make A Difference" which was the theme of the first general session on the Sunday. At the small group meetings delegates came up with legislative solutions to curb underage drinking and then all delegates voted on a final agenda of proposals that they presented to their legislators at a State House press conference on the Tuesday.

As further testament to the necessity of the summit, MADD cited a number of startling statistics:

- Alcohol is the leading cause of death for those aged 15-20, in traffic crashes, homicide, and suicide.
- 25 percent of Mass children begin drinking alcohol before their 11th birthdays.
- Eight young Americans die every day in alcohol-related traffic crashes.
- More tenth graders will get drunk this year than will go on to college.
- 47 percent of kids who begin drinking before age 14 will have an alcohol dependence problem at some time in their lives.

Boys lax squad qualifies for tourney before taking it on chin vs. state's mettle

The Cohasset boys' varsity lacrosse squad reached their first 2002 goal this week, beating Bourne and Marshfield for their 10th and 11th MIAA victories, assuring themselves of a second consecutive trip to the Div. 2 state tourney.

With an 11-7 record (not counting the Milton Academy game) and only a game remaining against Barnstable, the Skippers expected to find out on Friday who their first-round opponent would be. Cohasset will likely host a preliminary round game on Tuesday, May 28.

"While we've had a couple of disappointing losses, we've gutted out a tough schedule," said Coach Kevin Orcutt. "Now we'll see if we can lift our game a bit in the post-season, just as we did a year ago."

In 2001, Cohasset upset the tournament's second and third seeds in the quarter- and semifinals, but fell to Hingham in the state championship showdown.

Hingham beat the Skippers for the second time this season on Sunday night, despite a strong performance by senior net keeper Kyle Weber. Duxbury, currently ranked number-one in Massachusetts and 15th nationally, also took down the Skippers on Monday night.

Duxbury 19, Cohasset 7

Against Duxbury, Cohasset fell behind 6-0, but closed to 9-4 at the half on a pair of goals by Curt Kahn and single scores from Paul Previte and Matt Davis. Despite another heroic performance from Weber in net (19 saves), the Dragons pulled away in the second half, and finished with a 19-7 margin.

Kahn and Previte led the Skippers with three goals and an assist apiece. Matt Davis had a goal and three assists, while Robert Hickey, John Durkin and Jason Moore each had an assist. Kahn leads the team in

Girls pull even

Back-to-back comeback wins lift lady laxers to magic .500 mark

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Torin Sweeney is living, breathing support for that old sports adage that coaching is two-thirds ability to motivate.

For a guy who never coached girls or lacrosse before and proclaimed to know little about the game before this springr, the longtime Cohasset High football, wrestling and golf coach has clearly found a way to compensate. Exhibits 1 and 1A: two come from behind wins to open this week of play that have lifted the Lady Skippers to .500 for the first time since their 2-2 start.

With his Cohasset girls trailing 7-2 to Mansfield shortly before halftime Monday, their record already two games under the magic .500 mark with just five games remaining in the regular season, the rookie lacrosse coach called a timeout, and laid out a dose of reality in his best Knute Rockne-esque manner.

"I just told them that this could well be our season," confided Sweeney. "I talked to them a little, made a few adjustments and then sent them back out there."

THAT produced six unanswered goals over the remainder of the half and first five minutes of the second?!? Must have been one heck of a delivery.

"Coaching is coaching, and athletes are athletes" offered Sweeney, who coached a young and banged up wrestling team to a surprising Pilgrim Conference championship this past winter. "There are a lot of similarities in team sports."

The six goal explosion gave the visiting Skippers their first lead of the game at 8-7. Mansfield answered back, however, with a quick pair of tallies to re-take the lead. This time Sweeney didn't have to say as much.

"The defenders knew what they were doing wrong and the forwards had figured out what they should be doing too," noted the coach, who agreed to take over the girls lax squad on a one year basis to fill in for Kathy Gadiano, out on maternity leave.

The Skippers exploded for four goals in a four minute span to take a 12-9 lead with under five minutes to play.

However, Mansfield, which is also fighting for a tourney berth, bounced right back with two quick goals, the second one with 45 seconds to go to make it 12-11.

The hosts gained control of the ball with approximately 20 seconds to go and made a desperate charge on Cohasset goalie Gia Petrakis, but the junior netminder turned back a hard shot with her stick just before the final buzzer sounded, the last of her 13 saves.

"I breathed a big sigh of relief after Gina got her stick on that one," confessed Sweeney.

Junior Maura McKenney paced the attack with six goals and an assist, while senior captain Kristin Sheerin added four goals and an assist. Nicole Turgiss and Sera Genovese chipped in with a goal and an assist apiece.

The Lady Skippers needed a patented Sweeney refresher the next day at Bourne, as they again fell behind early, 3-1, and still trailed at the half, 5-4.

"I said a lot of the same things at half that I said the day before," confided Sweeney.

Hey, if it ain't broke, why fix it.

The Lady Skippers outscored the Canalwomen, 3-1 over the opening five minutes of the second frame to go up 7-6. Freshman Lauren Rizzotti provided a huge lift off the bench over this stretch. She scored the last goal of he first half, and then scored Cohasset goals number six and seven in a one minute span to give the hosts their first lead of the game.

When Bourne tied the game up again a few minutes later, however, that seemed to provide the final jolt needed by the Cohasset girls, as Senior Jay Bertovich has proven indispensable in his first year with the South Shore League champion Cohasset boys track team.

A perfect sports story

Cohasset boys track team completes second consecutive unbeaten season

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

It really is just about a perfect sports story.

For the second year in a row, the Cohasset boys track team has taken on and taken down all challengers — all from bigger schools, most with far larger rosters — riding the extraordinary talent and commitment of a handful of athletes.

"All year long we've been asking people to step up and all year one person or another has been coming through with flying colors," said Cohasset track coach Al LaFontain following Monday's South Shore League clinching 77-59 victory over Mashpee that lifted the Skippers to their second straight perfect 7-0 regular season.

Captain Tim Baird is one of many, in coach LaFontain's eyes, who typifies the Skippers spirit. The senior's best event is the 800-meters. That's the one he's qualified in for states, and the one for which he should ideally be using these last few meets to fine tune his performance for this weekend's State Class D race. However, he is also a gifted distance man, and LaFontain asked him on Monday, as he has at other "big meets" this year, to run instead in both the 1-mile and 2-mile races, something you rarely see track athletes attempt.

Not only did Tim attempt the per-

Girls tennis team knocks off Norwell to grab share of SSL crown for second year in a row

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

For the second straight year, Norwell and Cohaasset will share the South Shore League girls tennis championship, this thanks to a resounding 5-0 win for the Cohasset girls on Wednesday over Norwell, avenging an early season loss.

"We were anticipating that we would have to play our best to win," noted 11th year coach Sarah Meehan, who watched her team drop a 3-2 decision to the Lady Clippers in the first week of the season.

Junior captain Lindsay Grossman improved to 3-0 in her career against fellow SSL All-Star Sara Bitetti with a nailbiting three set victory.

Bitetti came out firing to win the first set 6-0, but Grossman outsteadied the two-time All-Scholastic player and fought off a triple match point at 3-5 in the second set to take it in two tiebreakers.

"You can't just out-hit Sarah," assessed Meehan, noting the change in game plan Grossman employed after the first set. "She plays a power game. It was really impressive tennis."

At second singles, freshman Elizabeth Stone trounced sophomore Angie Bizzozero in a clash of undefeated All-Stars, 6-0, 6-0. Bizzozero had not lost a match in either her freshman or sophomore year, while Stone has given up multiple games in only one match this Cohasset frosh phenom Elizabeth Stone won the battle of unbeaten players decisively in last Wednesday's showdown for the South Shore League crown, taking down Norwell all-star Angie Bizzozero, 6-0, 6-0.

Youth lacrosse teams win nine of 12 for the week

Three Cohasset youth lacrosse squads remained unbeaten last week, with all seven teams combining for a 9-2-1 record on the week.

The Cohasset 10-U White (3rd & 4th grades) team had a great week-end against two area rivals, running its record to 7-0 by beating Norwell 14-7 and topping a once-beaten Hingham team 4-1.

On Friday, May 17, the White team started slowly, falling behind on Friday night against Norwell falling behind for only the second time this year before running off 6 straight goals to lead 6-1 at the end of the 1st quarter. The Cohasset scoring started with great moves from Chris Walsh leading to two individual scores, followed by an Oliver Forrer-from-Eamon Davis connection. Davis then scored himself, before Brendan Doonan closed out the first quarter with two more scores. Walsh and Davis answered a Norwell score to swell the Cohasset lead to 8-2 at the half.

The second half saw the defense and attacks switch positions, with first-time goalie Brendan Horrigan doing a fine job in the cage. John Kearney and David Hernon led a tight defense as Andrew Littauer scored 2 goals and Kevin O'Connell and Thomas Pecca added one each. Ian Quinlan, the first half's goalie, netted two scores to close out the game at 14-7.

Sunday's battle against always-tough Hingham almost was cancelled due to a scheduling mishap, but Cohasset certainly arrived ready to play. Luke Ernst broke the ice in this defensive struggle, scoring first on an athletic, off-balance shot, and then converting a feed from John Kearney, giving Cohasset a 2-0 lead. Eamon Davis made a nice low shot count and Brendan Doonan finished off three dodges with a well-placed shot to make it 4-0 Cohasset. Hingham scored with 2 minutes left in the half after six great saves by goalie Jack Murphy.

Surprisingly, there was no second-half scoring from either side, as Cohasset defended its lead and kept Hingham at bay. The defense, led by Keegan Flynn, Thomas Pecca, Terrance Durkin and Taylor McQuade was great the whole afternoon. Ian Quinlan handled the goaltending the second half and was helped by strong middie defense led by Thomas Flibotte, Jeff Durkin, Phil Galligan, and Sean MacCarthy. Chris Brown and Andrew McKenna also helped out with good all-around performances.

Cohasset's other 10-U squad, the Blue team, opened its weekend Friday with a 4-4 tie against a big, physical Duxbury team. Duxbury scored the only goal of the first half, and their goaltender turned away several good Cohasset scoring chances.

Duxbury scored on a fast break to open the second half, then immediately duplicated the feat, moving to a 3-0 lead, as Cohasset called time-out to re-group. The Blue team did just that, with Dean Driscoll converting a feed from Max Shipp to break the ice. Duxbury led 4-1 heading into the final period, before Will Wise converted a feed from Driscoll, Jake Wheelwright capped a spectacular scoop-and-go from the midfield with an unassisted goal, and Justin Yeager converted a feed from Shipp with just 1:30 to go. Jack Murphy made 11 saves in the net to preserve the tie.

On Sunday, the 10-U Blue team hosted a short-handed Sandwich team and galloped to a 12-3 win. Cohasset raced to a 4-1 first-quarter lead on the strength of goals from Will Wise, Chase Murphy — his first of the season — Conor Queenan and Max Shipp. Shipp and Dean Driscoll picked up assists. The margin doubled in the second period, thanks to two goals from Driscoll — who added another assist as well — a second goal from Murphy and Sam Leahy's first goal of the season. Chris Brown picked up two assists as the game went to the half 8-2.

Justin Yeager scored twice — once off a feed from Queenan — as Cohasset players swapped positions in stretching the lead to 10-3 heading into the final period. Yeager completed the natural hat trick in the fourth quarter, with Sam Leahy adding a second goal, assisted by Alex Kinnealey, to close out the scoring. Jack Murphy and Chris Brown split the goaltending chores, each stopping two-thirds of the shots they faced.

Cohasset's 12-U White (5th and 6th grade) squad took three victories this week, with two close games and one blow-out, while building its record to 8-0.

On Thursday in Quincy, the home team controlled all the face-offs and midfield play and staked itself to a 4-0 lead before Cohasset found some offense. Peter Oswald answered with three goals for Cohasset, one assisted by midfielder Peter Ernst and one from attackman Andrew Bell, but Quincy bounced back to hold a 6-3 lead after one period. Cohasset met Quincy's challenge during the second quarter, as its overall team play improved and the experience of the team's veteran players began to show. The team scored four goals in the second frame, with midfielder John Sturino and T.J. Kennedy both converting feeds from Oswald, Peter Ernst scoring unassisted and then Charlie Czerkawski finishing a feed from Mark Flibotte. Quincy answered with one goal, so the game went to the half tied at 7.

Cohasset regrouped during the break and responded with three third-quarter goals while holding Quincy scoreless. Oswald netted all three goals, while goaltender Wes Ulmer — who finished with 9 saves on the game — kept Quincy at bay. Cohasset put the game away in the fourth quarter, as Ernst and Czerkawski scored unassisted, before Oswald fed Flibotte and Flibotte assisted Czerkawski to close out the Cohasset scoring. Quincy scored two late goals to make the final 14-9.

On Friday, May 17, Norwell opened strong and jumped out to a quick lead that it held almost to the half before Cohasset was able to jump out. Wes Ulmer and a close defense that played with limited substitutes kept the game close.

In the second half, Cohasset took control by dominating the battle for ground balls. Peter Oswald — who finished the day with seven goals and one assist — scored the game-winner with less than two minutes left, and the team celebrated its 11-10 victory in a pile of cleats and sticks when the game was over. Mark Flibotte and Peter Ernst each had a goal and an assist for Cohasset, with Charlie Czerkawski and T.J. Kennedy adding single goals. On Sunday, 12-U White scored off the opening faceoff on a picture-perfect fast break goal started by Peter Ernst, who dished to Peter Oswald who fed Charlie Czerkawski. From there, the floodgates opened, as Cohasset raced to a 7-0 first-quarter lead. Oswald scored three first-quarter goals, Czerkawski added his second and TJ Kennedy and Ramsey Davis tallied once each. Owen Landon and Evan Deutsch had first-period assists.

The second quarter continued to display a dominant Cohasset team that displayed proper sportsmanship, as it worked to ensure that all its players were included in the flow of the game. Cohasset added two goals in the quarter, with Czerkawski getting his third and Oswald netting his fourth. Hanover got on the board with one and the teams went to the half with Cohasset up 9- 1.

The third and fourth quarters saw the continuation of Cohasset's experience, as the team doubled its first half output and ended the day with an 18-2 victory. Goal scorers included: Ian Lyster-Brandt (his first of the season), Oswald's fifth with an assist to Pat Doonan, two from Sean Silvia, Owen Landon from Ramsey Davis, Mark Flibotte from Kennedy, John Sturino from Oswald, Kennedy from Flibotte, and Czerkawski's fourth of the day. Goaltender Wes Ulmer ended the day with four saves.

The 12-U Blue team split its weekend games, topping a developing Weymouth squad and losing a tight one to arch-rival Hingham.

The Friday night Weymouth contest felt more like a scrimmage, as Cohasset jumped out to a 7- 0 lead midway through the first quarter and used the rest of the game to hone passing and playmaking skills, with players swapping positions liberally. This proved to keep the game interesting for both teams as they enjoyed a summer-like afternoon. Chris Rose finished with four goals, Chris Mills and Matt Burgess both had two goals and an assist, Sam DeGiacomo, Logan Chase and defenseman Jake Cuneo — with his first goal of the season — had single scores. Alex Shipp added three assists and Andrew Smith two, as Cohasset ended the day up 11-1. Justin Hollis recorded five saves in the Cohasset nets.

Sunday's road game with Hingham's "A" squad was a different story altogether. Hingham came out strong on dominant face-off play by Kyle Roy — a Cohasset player who crossed the border to play for Hingham — and quickly marked two tallies to put the Cohasset team behind. Despite superb close defense from Jake Cuneo and Mike Bilodeau, Hingham put another two goals in before Chris Rose answered on a fast-break feed from Matt Burgess to close the gap to 4-1 after one period.

A quick Hingham score was answered by a Cohasset time-out, after which the team re-grouped. Burgess, who began to dominate the face-offs, started a fast break finished by Mike Grimm to make it 6 - 2. Chris Rose then weaved his way from behind to make it 6-3 and the momentum started to shift. Goalie Logan Chase kept Hingham at bay with some magical saves, while Andersen Lynner, Chris Kuppens, and Justin Hollis helped create an iron wall to protect him, as the tide started to turn.

Alex Shipp slipped a double-team to find Justin Connors in front of the net to make it 6-4, then Sam DeGiacomo made a Larry Bird-like steal from a Hingham defender and netted the proceeds to make it 6-5. Justin Hollis took a loose ball the length of the field and fed Mike Grimm to tie the score. Hingham scored during a power play to close out the half leading 7 - 6.

Hingham started the second half with two goals, but Cohasset got back on track when Rose found Nathan Porter cutting from the side to make it 9 - 7. New goaltender Chris Mills came up big to stop several Hingham opportunities, before Alex Ship and Chris Rose worked a give-and- go to cut the gap to 9-8. Andrew Smith then picked off a Hingham clear and fed Mike Grimm to again tie the score. Hingham answered with two scores of its own, to close the quarter with an 11-9 lead.

The 4th quarter was probably a defensive war, with both teams determined to keep the other off the scoreboard as they appeared energized on both ends of the field. Hollis made several key checks to stifle fast breaks, Mills made 4 close-in saves, stuffing one Hingham attacker in front of the cage, and Pat Hurley outhustled players twice his size to keep the play even. The teams traded goals with Mike Grimm scoring for Cohasset. The turning point came with 5 minutes left and Cohasset playing with a two-man advantage due to Hingham penalties, when a Hingham defender stole the ball and took it the length of the field for a score. Grimm answered with his fifth goal of the game, but it was all Cohasset could muster, as the final score had Hingham on top 13-11.

Cohasset's unbeaten 14-U team (7th and 8th grades) followed the Blue 12-U team onto the field in Hingham, and a Mike Bunstein-to-Mike Pecca connection gave the team a lead it would not relinquish. Aidan Buick and Jared Kinch followed quickly, as Cohasset jumped out to a 3-1 lead. The teams traded goals until the half, with Pecca scoring again and Kinch — playing with a long-stick on the penalty-killing unit — blasting a feed from Bunstein past Hingham's goalie. Cohasset netminder Ben Libby made 11 saves in the first half.

In the second half, Cohasset quickly extended its lead to 8-4, on goals by Buick, Kinch and Ryan Kucinski. After Hingham run made the score 9-6 — Cohasset's goal coming from Austen Lanzillotti on a feed from Buick — Cohasset clamped down on defense and shut the home team out the rest of the way. Kinch's fourth goal of the game was the only fourth-quarter score. Cohasset's close defense of Mike Barnes, Bobby Meikleham, Patrick Flynn and Robert Silvia — supplemented by Jeff Brown, who split time at midfield — played its best game of the season in support of the offense. The win ran the 14-U team's record to 6-0-1.

In girls action that followed the boys games in Hingham, Cohasset's 12-U team put together its best effort of the season to thoroughly control a talented Hingham team. Cohasset jumped to a quick 4-0 lead behind two goals each from Gabriella Flibotte and Katie Gaumer. Gaumer's goals — and a third one that was waved off by a crease violation — were her first of the season. Katelyn Ryan picked up her first point of the season with an assist on Flibotte's ice-breaker.

In the second half, Cohasset dominated the action, and it paid off in the offensive end with five different goal-scorers. Alexandra Graven, Siobhan Fludder, Maura Barnes, Amy Meikleham and Flibotte each netted a goal, with Meikleham adding an assist, as Cohasset stifled any thoughts at a Hingham rally and closed with a 9-3 win.

McKenna Teague teamed with Caroline McElhinny and Rebecca Evans to lead a dominant defensive performance; Teague was particularly impressive in stopping the Hingham rush and starting Cohasset fast breaks. Thomson Jaffe backstopped Cohasset with four saves.

At the 14-U level, the girls played their third consecutive game in which they dominated play but came out on the wrong end of the score, falling to Hingham, 5-4.

After falling behind 3-0 early, Lisa Spirito and Kathryn Evans put Cohasset back into the game with unassisted goals. Cohasset controlled the action, but missed several opportunities and had three scores waved off for crease violations.

The second half was a scoreless defensive battle for 15 minutes, before Haley Haracz scored her first goal of the season off a feed from Caren Garber. Hingham answered back before Evans scored her second of the game. From there, Cohasset controlled play but had a hard time finishing its shots, missing several times as the final seconds ticked off the clock. Cohasset had so many scores called back and had so controlled play throughout — particularly birthday-girl Tessa Leahy on defense and Mary Previte from the attack — that Hingham's coaches and players actually thought Cohasset had won the game. Aisling Guinee finished with three saves in the net for Cohasset, which fell to 1-4 on the season with the loss.

Amazing ride continues

Boys tennis team clinches tourney berth, turn sites on second place

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

They say the good teams find a way to win the close ones. That is exactly why the Cohasset boys tennis team is heading back to the State Tournament for the second straight year.

"It is way beyond the expectations we had at the beginning of the season," said first year Cohasset coach Kent Parrot after the team clinched a playoff berth with a 3-2 victory over South Shore League newcomer Harwich.

Cohasset's record now stands at 7-5 overall and 7-4 in the league. With a win today over Carver, a team the Skippers beat for their second win of the season, they would earn second place in the SSL, something that may even earn the team a home playoff match.

"Our goal was to be over .500, and we have achieved that," explained Parrot. "but we have another mini-goal in beating Carver and taking second place."

Of the team's 12 matches this year, eight have been decided by one match, with the Skippers winning an amazing seven of those eight. The only one point loss was to Mashpee, who will also head to the State Tournament next week.

The Skippers most recent "edge out" win was pulled off last Wednesday, the victory coming down in Harwich. One day removed from topping the Rough Ryders 3-2 in Cohasset, the Skippers topped them again to qualify for the post-season.

Sophomore Jesse Brewer continued his extremely solid season by knocking off heavy-hitter Ash Alcorn at third singles for his fourth straight win. Brewer completed the two-day sweep of Alcorn with a 6-0, 7-5 win, by far the quickest match of the day.

Harwich evened the score when sophomore number one Craig Druscella (11-1 in league) knocked off junior captain David Ingber 6-3, 6-3.

Harwich captain Justin Turco then avenged the loss he suffered on Tuesday, beating sophomore Tim Anton in straight sets at second singles.

Down 2-1, Cohasset needed to win both doubles points to take the match, something they had not done all year. But junior Ross Lieb-Lappen and Andrew Wise took second doubles easily to leave it all in the hands of first doubles, who were then 0-11 on the year.

With both squads watching, and heavy winds starting to pick up, junior Scott Faber and Andrew Busk combined for their first varsity win as partners in three sets, 6-3, 2-6, 6-4.

"All year long, our singles had been the real thrust of our team," appraised Parrot. "But our doubles teams are really coming around, and at the right time too."

The first doubles win in Harwich was only one in a series of pressure-packed, third set wins for the team this year.

Ingber beat Abington's Eric Goldman 6-4 in the third and Mashpee's Matt Langler in a tiebreaker to give Cohasset the win in both matches.

Anton recovered from an 0-6 second set loss to Turco on Tuesday to win his three-setter 6-1 and give the Skippers a victory.

Brewer ended a three and a half hour marathon over Alcorn last week to assure his team the win.

Andrew Wise and Drew Hertig gave Cohasset its first doubles win of the year in a 3-2 decision over Abington to put their team into the win column in the season's first week.

All this, and only two of the team's nine players had ever played team tennis before this year.

"It has just been a great thing with not a lot of depth," noted the coach. "It has been a phenomenal season."

Girls pull even

they ripped off four unanswered goals over a six minute span to take control of the game for good at 11-7.

The defense did the job from there, holding the desperate and hard charging Canalwomen to just one goal over the last 10 minutes.

McKenney notched four goals and an assist to take over the team lead from Sheerin in scoring, this output raising her totals for the season to 39 goals and 17 assists. Sheerin, who has led the Lady Skippers in scoring each of the last three years and is clearly the focus of all opposing defenses, had a goal and an assist – her 36th and 18th of the year, respectively.

"If teams are going to concentrate on shutting down Kristin, that opens things up some for Maura," appraised Sweeney. "She's really taken it up a few notch in the last few weeks to give the offense a lift. That diversity makes us a much better team."

Turgiss and Genovese again added a goal and assist each, and defender Ashley Faber made a great late rush to pot a very important 11th goal, which "seemed to take the winds of Bourne's sails," according to Sweeney.

The Lady Skippers had four games left after Tuesday's win, and must win two of those to qualify for the state tourney. That run was slated to begin with yesterday's makeup at home versus Marshfield. They then host Norwell today (3:30 start), hoping to avenge a 9-6 loss last month that Sweeney called "our worst game of the year."

A pair of wins here would sew up a tourney berth for the Lady Skippers. This is obviously the scenario Sweeney is eyeing, as the last two games see a very good Martha's Vineyard team and revenge-minded Bourne travelling to Cohasset.

"It would be nice if we could look at those last two games as tune-ups for the tourney, but I'm not banking on anything. Norwell (8-7-1) is still fighting for a playoff spot too."

Tracksters complete second unbeaten season

fecta on Monday, he won both races to provide the Skippers with 10 huge first place points. What is more, teammate and fellow senior Dan Kinchla ran both races and finished second, collecting six more points for the Skippers cause.

"Tim and Dan are just two in a long list of kids who totally sold out for me this year," gushed LaFontain. "Whenever it was a matter of doing what was best for the team or best for themselves, they always chose the team. I tell you I just couldn't be prouder."

Pete Maitland, another senior captain, is arguably the most accomplished member of the team. Last June, he became the first C.H.S. athlete to compete at the New England track and field championships in a decade, his benchmark event: the javelin. LaFontain, again for big meets, usually asks this extraordinary athlete (who is also a league all-star in soccer and basketball). Pete does not like to run it, but he always honors his coach's request. LaFontain chuckles when he passes this information along.

"Its kind of a joke now," he said. "It's a miserable race to Pete, especially with the other things he's doing, but he still does it, and usually wins."

This was the case on Monday, as Pete rang up five points for a victory in the 800 and another five for his win in the javelin.

Ian Kidder and first year trackster Jay Bertovich made it a clean sweep for Cohasset in the javelin, finishing 2-3, respectively. Kidder also won the 200-meter race and took second in the triple jump, while Bertovich ran to a victory in the 100-meter hurdles.

"What a great addition Jay Bertovich has been to our team," said LaFontain of the senior who previously played for the CHS golf team in the spring. "Pleasant surprise doesn't even begin to describe what he's meant to us."

Speaking of pleasant surprises, the return to form of returning league high jump champ Liam Martin after a horrific leg break this past football season has been absolutely huge. Martin has regularly been winning the high jump competitions at duel meets, as he did on Monday, but LaFontain also asked him to run the 300 hurdles, something he's been hesitant to do for most of the season, given the concern of re-injury. On Monday, however, on Monday he didn't feel he had any choice, especially with the Skippers trailing by four points after the field events (where he thought they held an advantage going in).

Martin ran and, despite the rust, captured second place, which helped begin an unlikely comeback.

At the South Shore League meet a week ago Tuesday, Cohasset's Jared Krupczak (100-meter), Kidder (200) and the 4x100 relay team of Krupczak, Kidder, Jason Brown and Eric Belz finished second to their Mashpee counterparts. With their title on the line 13 days later, however, these four Cohasset boys came up with a little something extra to return the favor, taking firsts across the board in these events.

"That was just more of the same," offered a smiling LaFontain. "Kids coming up big when they absolutely had to."

Not to be overlooked were some of the big second and third place points provided by Steve Laney (second in discus), Krupczak (second in long jump), Adrian Batson (second in 400), Belz (third in 200) and Brown (third in 100).

Track Notes

Cohasset boys 73, Abington 63

Not to be lost in the shuffle, the Skippers took down long time rival Abington in an even tighter meet last Wednesday.

Kidder won the 200 and triple jump and ran a leg for the winning 4x100 team, along with Brown, Belz and Krupczak.

Other winners included Krupczak (100), Baird (mile), Maitland (800, javelin), Kinchla (2-mile) and Martin (high jump).

Girls surge to finish

The young Lady Skippers finished off an amazing second half of the season run, winning their fourth meet in a row Monday (Cohasset 71, Mashpee 64) to finish 4-3.

Sophomore Jen Buckey led the way, as usual, with three first place finishes.

Looking ahead

The Skippers will send one of their biggest groups ever to the State Class D meet this Saturday at Norwell High.

Qualifying among the boys were Krupczak (100, 4x100 relay), Baird (800), Maitland (javelin, 4x400), Kidder (triple jump, 200), Martin (high jump), Laney (discus), Belz (4x100), Kinchla (mile), Brown (4x100), Batson (4x400) and Cosimo Cambi (4x400).

For the girls, Buckley (javelin, 400), Gilian Weber (800), freshman Mary Silvia (800) and Nicole Whitney (400) will all be competing individually, and also as a unit for the 4x400 relay. Maura O'Brien will also be there for the high jump and discus.

Through the muck and mire

Cohasset boys track team battles heavy rain and winds to win S.S. Principal's Meet

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Somewhere, Alaska would have made a more conducive track and field setting than Norwell High for Saturday's South Shore Principals meet. At least it would have been dry at the North Pole.

Athletes were treated to a morning of pelting cold rain and chilly winds. Unlike last year's all-state championships where it poured but warm temperatures at least made the soggy conditions bearable. The usually competitive Principals meet turned into a test of attrition. Only one-third of the teams decided to compete and several called it quits before meet's end.

Norwell coach Chuck Martin, the meet director, said he can't remember a year where conditions were anywhere close to what the athletes, priming for this weekend's class meet, faced on Saturday.

"You feel bad for the kids because they're in prime condition and they can't use the meet to get their best time," said Norwell coach and meet director Chuck Martin. "Every year it's 75 degrees and sunny, every year. Mother Nature was going to catch up to us eventually.

"I can't remember one ever being cancelled."

Mother Nature's May storm didn't stop Silver Lake's DaviAnn Brown, the defending New England 400-meter dash champion, from defending her Principals' title. Brown, ran away from the field for the win in 59.7 seconds — an excellent time, given the strong winds, rain and cold.

Scituate's Hilary Birch won the javelin with her 102-6, well ahead of runner-up Rachael Lincoln of Hingham (94-8).

Kayla Halloran of Norwell was an easy winner in the mile with a 5:35 and teammate Lydia Shute's leap of 31-8 clinched first place in the triple jump.

Dan Nastou of Hingham flexed his throwing muscles, winning the shot put with a 44-3 heave and following it up with a victory in the discus with his 110-2 throw.

Cohasset, which won the boys team title, was led by Liam Martin and Tim Baird, who won the high jump (5-8) and 800 meters (2:05), respectively, while teammates Pete Maitland and Jay Bertovich went 1-2 in the javelin with throws of 149-7 and 134.

Sacred Heart won on the girls' side, led by a first-place finish in the 4x800-meter relay.

Silver Lake's Teryn Wiedmann bolted to a 200-meter win in 29.8.

scoring with 66 points (43 goals, 23 assists), while Previte – closing in on his 200th career point – stands second with 31 goals, 16 assists for 47 points.

Hingham 12, Cohasset 4

Playing under the lights at Alumni Field, the Skippers never got their offense untracked against Hingham and lost, 12-4.

Cohasset trailed at the half, 6-0, before cutting the deficit to five on a shot by junior Curt Kahn off a feed from classmate Robert Hickey. But the Skippers would never get closer as Hingham rattled off three more unanswered scores.

Weber had 12 saves in the first half, keeping the game within reach.

Kahn led Cohasset scorers with a pair of goals and an assist. Hickey had a goal and an assist, while Paul Previte had the fourth goal. Eric Libby and Pete Whoriskey each picked up assists.

Cohasset 16, Marshfield 8

The boys varsity won their second in a row, topping Pilgrim rival Marshfield 16-8 last Friday.

Cohasset was led by junior attackman Curt Kahn, who had a career record six goals and two assists. Kahn got great support from seniors Jason Moore (three goals, four assists) and Paul Previte (three goals, two assists).

Cohasset led 9-5 at the half, and extended the lead to 13-6 at the end of three before clearing the bench.

Other Cohasset scorers were Robert Hickey, with a pair of goals and an assist, Matt Davis with a goal and two assists, and Eric Libby with a goal and an assist. John Durkin and David DeVito each had an assist.

Kyle Weber made 14 saves in goal, while his counterpart Todd Faiella had 25 saves.

Cohasset 15, Bourne 2

The Skipperst clinched its trip to the state Div. 2 tournament for the second year in a row, when they beat non-league foe Bourne 15-2 under the lights at Alumni Field on Thursday.

Eleven different players scored for the Skippers, including six members of the varsity hockey team that had been eliminated by the Canalmen in the Division 3 hockey tourney just two months ago.

Curt Kahn led the offense with a hat trick, while Jason Moore (with an assist) and freshman Jake Previte each had a pair of goals. Single goal scorers for the Skippers were Paul Previte (with two assists), Eric Libby, John Durkin (with an assist), defensemen Tom Anderson and Chris Caron (the first goal of his high school career), Robert Hickey, Mike Rasmussen and Mark Davis (his first of the season).

Freshman Jon Grimm and soph JT Oronte each had an assist. Oronte's was the first point of his lacrosse career.

Cohasset sophomore Holly Graham held on for a big three set win over Norwell senior Ashley Dye — 6-4, 4-6, 6-2 – in the SSL clash of the titans last Wednesday.

entire season.

"[Bizzozero] knew ahead of time that she'd be in for a tough match," asserted Meehan. "Elizabeth clearly wanted to avenge the team's loss."

Sophomore Holly Graham took the third singles point over hard-hitting senior Ashley Dye, who was filling in for the mononucleosis-plagued veteran Meg Kelly. Graham won the three-set decision 6-4, 4-6, 6-2.

The Cohasset doubles teams surprised no one in maintaining their undefeated status in league, both with dominating straight set performances.

The All-Star pair of junior Julie Shea and freshman Kate Englander ripped the bumped up second doubles team of Sam Swadish and Kate Mulvaney. At second doubles, senior captain Kelly Stone and sophomore Courtney Caron, another of the SSL's four All-Star selectee pairs, beat Jenna Wright and Christina Jacobson by a score of 6-2, 6-3.

This is the exact same scenario as it was last year with the teams sharing the league title. In both the 2001 and 2002 seasons, Cohasset avenged an early season loss to their rivals with a win at home.

Since season opening losses to Hingham and Norwell, the Lady Skippers have rattled off 12 straight for a 12-2 record. Their most recent win was another 5-0 destruction of neighboring Scituate.

Cohasset beat the Lady Sailors 4-1 a year ago, even though they did not have Grossman leading the way. This much improved team, which took six of the 15 spots on this year's All-Star team, also took the match with ease.

For Norwell, the All-Star selectees included Bitetti, for the third year in a row, and Bizzozero, who has amassed a 13-1 record this year.

With the All-Star selection process and the league title all said and done, both Cohasset and Norwell turn their attention to the playoffs.

With outstanding records, either of them could be contenders for a potential Sectional championship.

"Everyone comes out aggressively because they have confidence in the other people on their team to get their points," reported Meehan. "But you have got to play to win."

Children's author to sign new book

Buttonwood Books in Cohasset is pleased to host author/illustrator Tracy Kane on Sat. June 1 from 1-3 p.m.. Tracy's book "Fairy Houses" is a delightful children's book complete with directions on constructing a fairy house in your own yard. The rules are simple. Only natural materials can be used, and none of nature's materials that are still living can be used or disturbed. Fairies are very careful to preserve our natural environment. Join us to make fairy wands and learn how to build a fairy house, as our planter at the front of the store becomes a home for fairies. Fairy dress is optional! Ms. Kane's second book, "Fairy Boats" is scheduled to be available on that date as well. Come meet Tracy Kane and learn how to build your own fairy house. Call 781-383-2665 to order your signed copy if unable to attend.

Band concerts

During the past 11 seasons, concert funding has been provided through the generosity of the South Shore Playhouse Associates, Inc. The South Shore Music Circus donations are matched by a grant from the American Federation of Musicians, in New York City.

Based upon continued South Shore Music Circus funding, the schedule for the 2002 season is Tuesday, July 9, and Tuesday, July 23, at 7:30 p.m. on the Cohasset Common.

Performances will be by the 30-piece South Shore Concert Band under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh.

Concerts are free of charge and the public is invited. It is a good idea to bring either lawn chairs or blankets to sit on, and from time to time, insect repellent is a good item to have available. You may call the recreation office at 383-4109 to check on the status of concerts should you be in doubt as to weather conditions.

Making strides against cancer

The opening ceremonies for relay featured various speakers including Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham. Bradley addressed the crowd and voiced his wish to eradicate the terrible disease.

"My hope is that one day, I will stand here not to kick off the Survivors' Lap, but the victory lap in the fight against cancer," Bradley said.

After the first lap the team members, who weren't walking, had the opportunity to become involved with a variety of activities. From movies, to marital arts exhibitions, to acoustic guitar concerts, the Relay For Life provided a lot of entertainment.

There was also plenty of food to help fill walkers' appetites as area restaurants including Atlatinca, Red Lion Inn, Windsor Tea Shop, Schooners and The Borrowed Butler donated samplings from their menus. For a $5 donation, participants could enjoy as much food as they desired. The Taste of the Relay raised more than $1900 this year.

However, the most memorable part of the night happened after the sun went down.

After the sunset, more than 4,000 luminaria candles lined the track in honor or in memory of someone who had cancer. It is usually described as the most powerful moment of the relay.

"You haven't experienced the Relay For Life until you see the luminaria," Burns said.

After walking all night and into the day on Saturday, the relay closed a few hours early due to the inclement weather. Anyone still needing to turn in donations may send a check, made payable to the American Cancer Society, to the American Cancer Society, c/o Relay For Life in Cohasset, 1115 West Chestnut St., Brockton, MA 02301.

Police urge all to buckle up

Beefed up patrols on holiday weekend

Chief Robert W. Jackson announced the Cohasset Police Department will join approximately 220 Massachusetts police departments and the State Police in the Operation America Buckles Up Children (ABC) Mobilization through May 27.

Each year during the weeklong Mobilizations in May and November, officers from all 50 states step-up enforcement of traffic laws, in particular those involving state safety belt and child passenger safety laws. More than 10,000 law enforcement agencies are participating nationwide in this up-coming Mobilization. In Massachusetts, the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau (GHSB) coordinates the Mobilizations.

"Throughout this holiday period, we will redouble our enforcement and education efforts to increase safety belt and child safety seat use."

— Police Chief Robert W. Jackson

"We are using this Mobilization to reduce the danger we all face from motor vehicle crashes during the heavily-traveled Memorial Day Weekend," said Chief Jackson. "Throughout this holiday period, we will redouble our enforcement and education efforts to increase safety belt and child safety seat use. GHSB research shows those communities with higher safety belt use rates have fewer motor vehicle-related fatalities and injuries."

The Cohasset Police Department has a GHSB grant for extra traffic enforcement that was awarded this spring and is in effect through September 2002. With these grant funds, the department will have extra traffic enforcement during the Mobilization.

WORSHIP NEWS

Inclusion workshop

On Monday, June 3 from 7-9 p.m., St. Mary of the Sacred Heart Parish on Route 139 in Hanover will host an "Evening of Listening and Dialogue" working toward the inclusion of persons with disabilities in the life of the Church.

The question, "How can the Church serve you better?" will be addressed at this session. The Church is richer and truly the Body of Christ when all are welcome. The South Region of the Archdiocese of Boston will explore more and better ways to include persons with all levels of disabilities in the parish life.

This evening of listening and dialogue is planned to gain input from persons living with all levels of disabilities, their family members, clergy, catechetical leaders, educators, health-care workers, and anyone with an interest in this ministry, especially young people. The questions to be addressed are:

- What are the needs of persons with disabilities?
- What are the needs of their families?
- How can we, as Church, promote programs that enhance spiritual growth and development?
- What gifts are we missing by not including persons with disabilities in the life of the Church?

For more information on this upcoming workshop concerning persons with disabilities, call Marilyn Zedick at 781-829-1229.
